Notre Dame band members strike a chord with performance that connects generations

By John Shaughnessy

Annie Hill and Allie Braschler usually perform in front of 80,000 cheering, clapping and screaming fans in one of the most well-known football stadiums in the world. Yet on the sun-kissed early afternoon of Oct. 17, the two University of Notre Dame juniors joined 47 other members of the school’s marching band in a special performance for just more than 100 people at A Caring Place, the adult day care program of Catholic Charities Indianapolis.

And even though the 49 musicians represented just a small part of the band’s regular 385 members, their playing of the “Notre Dame Victory March” and other Irish favorites blared triumphantly through Fairview Presbyterian Church—where A Caring Place is located—bringing the elderly and developmentally disabled adults to their feet.

The mini-concert marked a resounding climax to what had been a trip of the heart—as the 49 band members set aside four days of their weeklong fall break to perform service in Indianapolis that helped feed the poor through Gleaners Community Food Bank, create an outdoor walkway at a public school, and assist with projects at Central Catholic and Holy Cross Central schools, which are Notre Dame ACE Academies.

As the service commissioners for the Notre Dame band, Hill and Braschler led the efforts.

“When you’re in college, it’s easy to think just about yourself, your school work and your friends,” said Braschler, a saxophone player from South Haven, Mich. “It’s nice to put the focus on other people. Members of the marching band are hardworking, kind people who want to give back.”

Archbishop invites all to join him in prayer leading up to bishops’ meeting

Dear Brothers and Sisters in Christ:

The U.S. bishops are joining together in a commitment of prayer and reparation leading up to the bishops’ general assembly on Nov. 12-14, where we will be making critical decisions in response to the clergy sexual abuse crisis.

With my brother bishops across the nation, I will be dedicating myself to seven days of intensified prayer and fasting, from Monday, Nov. 5, through Sunday, Nov. 11. The intentions for this period of prayer and sacrifice are three-fold:

• For the healing and support of all victims of clergy sexual abuse.
• For the conversion and just punishment of the perpetrators and concealers of sexual abuse.
• For the strength of the bishops to be holy shepherds in protecting and leading our sheep from all harm.

If you feel called to do so, you are welcome to join me in praying for these intentions.

I would also be grateful for any prayers for me and my brother bishops during our general assembly, that we may follow the guidance of the Holy Spirit in responding to the tragedy of clergy sexual abuse in the Church.

With assurance of my prayers for you, I remain

Sincerely yours in Christ,

Moîl Reverend Charles C. Thompson
Archbishop of Indianapolis

Nov. 10-11 is the annual United Catholic Appeal intention weekend in archdiocesan parishes

The weekend of Nov. 10-11 is the archdiocesan annual United Catholic Appeal (UCA) intention weekend in parishes across the archdiocese.

The goal for this year’s appeal is $66.6 million. The money will be distributed to various ministries and organizations throughout central and southern Indiana that provide help that no single parish or deaconry could independently offer.

The theme of this year’s appeal is “All for the Sake of Others.”

“My dad was good at fixing cars,” says Archbishop Charles C. Thompson. “He especially liked brake repair, often fixing brakes for friends, family and neighbors.

“But he would never take money for his work. Instead, he would ask the person to just pass it on to someone else who needed it.”

Similarly, says Archbishop Thompson, “I am asking you to please pass on some of the blessings God has given you by making a gift to our United Catholic Appeal.”

As the shepherd of the Church in central and southern Indiana, he says he sees the many needs throughout central and southern Indiana.

Among those needs are seminarian and deacon formation, clergy retirement, refugee resettlement, shelter for the homeless, Catholic centers for college students, Catholic education and much more.

As with the parable of the good Samaritan (Lk 10:25-37), Catholics are called to assist all those in need. And as in the parable of the widow’s mite (Lk 21:1-4), it is not the amount of the donation that matters, but that each gives out of their own livelihood rather than out of their surplus.

The examples below, based on statistics from the archdiocesan Office of Stewardship and Development, illustrate how various contribution amounts can make a difference in central and southern Indiana:

• $10 provides undergarments for two homeless children.
• $50 provides three meals a day for a family of five for five days.
• $100 provides training for 30 sponsor couples on how to mentor newly-engaged couples.
• $400 pays tuition for one seminarian to participate in a summer hospital chaplaincy program.

USCCB president condemns shooting at synagogue, all ‘acts of hate’

WASHINGTON (CNS)—The U.S. Catholic bishops stand with “our brothers and sisters of the Jewish community,” the president of the U.S. Conference of Catholic Bishops (USCCB) said on Oct. 27 after a horrific shooting earlier that day in Pittsburgh at the Tree of Life Synagogue, described as a hub of Jewish life in that city.

The shooting occurred during a morning baby-naming ceremony, for which an estimated crowd of 45 to 100 people had gathered, according to news reports. There were 11 fatalities, all adults. Six others were injured, including four members of law enforcement.

“We condemn all acts of violence and hate and yet again, call on our nation and public officials to confront the plague of gun violence,” said Cardinal Daniel N. DiNardo of Galveston-Houston.

“Sacrifice as a response to political, racial or religious differences must be confronted with all possible effort. God and nothing less,” he said. “He brings us back to our common humanity as his sons and daughters.”

At the Vatican on Oct. 28, Pope Francis prayed for those affected by the deadly attack, calling it an “inhumane act of violence.”

“May the Lord comfort the families of the deceased and care for those wounded,” he said. “As we pray for peace in our lives, our communities and the world … May our heart and prayers are especially lifted up for our Jewish sisters and brothers and the law enforcement officers who rushed into harm’s way.”

Bishops were apprised of local law enforcement after exchanging gunfire with police outside the synagogue, following his shooting spree inside.

He was hospitalized for injuries he sustained, which required surgery, according to Jones. He said Bowers remained in the hospital in fair condition and was under guard. The alleged shooter went before a federal magistrate on the afternoon of Oct. 29.

Officials also released the names of those who were killed: brothers Cecil and David Rosenthal, ages 59 and 54; a husband and wife, Sylvan and Bernice Simon, ages 86 and 84, Joyce Fenienberg, 75; Richard Gottfried, 65; Rose Mallinger, 97; Terry Rabinowitz, 66; Daniel Stein, 71; Melvin Wax, 88; and Irving Younger, 69.

In his statement, Cardinal DiNardo, who was ordained as a priest for the Diocese of Pittsburgh, said, “I commend to our Lord the victims, including first responders, and the consolation of their families. May Almighty God be with them and bring them comfort at this tragic time.”

Pittsburgh Bishop David A. Zubik denounced the shooting and said the entire Pittsburgh community is devastated.

“The relationship between the Catholic diocese and the Tree of Life Synagogue, he said, has been “close over many years.”

In a statement to the media, he said: “May God free us from fear and hatred, and sow peace in our lives, our communities and in the world … We pray for peace in our lives, our communities and in the world … May our heart and prayers are especially lifted up for our Jewish sisters and brothers and the law enforcement officers who rushed into harm’s way.”

Prayer, loving one’s neighbor and working to end bigotry must be the response to the hatred shown by the shooting, he said.

“Anti-Jewish bigotry, and all religious and ethnic bigotry, is a terrible sin,” he said. “As we pray for peace in our communities and comfort for the grieving, we must put prayer into action by loving our neighbors and working to make ‘Never again!’ a reality.”

Abuse crisis, day of discernment, prayer top agenda for Baltimore meeting

WASHINGTON (CNS)—Discussion and voting on concrete measures to address the abuse crisis, and a day of spiritual discernment and prayer will top the agenda for the U.S. bishops when they meet on Nov. 12-14 for the fall general assembly in Baltimore.

Public sessions of the assembly also will be livestreamed, live tweeted and carried via satellite.

The assembly will begin on Nov. 12 with an address by Cardinal Daniel N. DiNardo of Galveston-Houston, who is USCCB president, as well as remarks by Archbishop Christophe Pierre, papal nuncio to the United States.

The body of bishops will then adjourn to an on-site chapel for a full day of spiritual discernment and prayer. This will be followed by a Mass celebrated at the site of the assembly that evening.

During their business sessions, the U.S. bishops will discuss and vote on a series of concrete measures to respond to the abuse crisis, including those approved for their agenda at the September meeting of the Administrative Committee.

Actions approved by the committee on Sept. 19 and to be voted on include approving the establishment of a third-party confidential reporting system for claims of any abuse by bishops.

Committee members also instructed the bishops’ Committee on Canonical Affairs and Church Governance to develop proposals for policies addressing restrictions on bishops who were removed or resigned because of allegations of abuse of minors or adults.

They also initiated the process of developing a code of conduct for bishops regarding sexual misconduct with a minor or adult or “negligence in the exercise of his office related to such cases.”

The Administrative Committee consists of the officers, chairmen and regional representatives of the USCCB. The committee, which meets in March and September, is the highest authority of the USCCB outside of the full body of bishops when they meet for their fall and spring general assemblies. Archbishop Charles C. Thompson is a member of the committee.

The bishops also will vote on a proposed pastoral on racism titled “Open Wide Our Hearts: The Enduring Call to Love—A Pastoral Letter Against Racism.”

“Despite many promising strides made in our country, the ugly cancer of racism still infects our nation,” the proposed document says. “Racist acts are sinful because they violate justice. They reveal a failure to acknowledge the human dignity of the persons offended, to recognize them as the neighbors Christ calls us to love.”

Also on the agenda will be a voice vote to endorse the sainthood cause of Sister Thea Bowman, the granddaughter of slaves and the only African-American member of the Franciscan Sisters of Perpetual Adoration. The request comes from Bishop Joseph R. Kopacz of Jackson, Miss., where Sister Thea grew up and also where she ministered in her last years while taking care of her aging parents as she battled cancer.
Pope apologizes to young people who have felt ignored by the Church

VATICAN CITY (CNS)—Speaking on behalf of all adult Catholics, Pope Francis formally closed the Synod of Bishops by formally closing the Synod of Bishops by

VATICAN CITY (CNS)—The Catholic Church and all its members must get better at listening to young people, taking their questions seriously, recognizing them as full members of the Church, patiently walking with them and offering guidance as they discover a path to live their faith, the Synod of Bishops said.

While the synod’s final document spoke of friendship, affection, sexuality and “sexual inclinations,” those issues were not the center of concern in the lengthy final document, which was released on Oct. 27.

The synod, which began on Oct. 3 and concluded with a Mass on Oct. 28, brought together 267 voting members—cardinals, bishops, 18 priests and two religious brothers—and 72 experts and observers, including three dozen men and women under 30 to discuss “young people, the faith and vocational discernment.”

For the vote on the final document, 249 bishops and priests participated; two-thirds approval or 166 votes, were required to keep a paragraph in the document. The version they voted on had 167 numbered paragraphs.

The focus of the final document was on improving ways to support young Catholics’ baptismal call to holiness, to welcome the contributions they make to the Church, and help them in their process of growing in faith and in deciding the way of life that would best correspond to what God wants from them.

The emphasis on the Church listening to young people also led to an emphasis on the Church listening to all people—including women—renewing communities and structures for a “synodal Church” where all members listen to, support and challenge one another and share responsibility for the Church’s one mission of spreading the Gospel.

“Listening is an enthronement in freedom, which requires humility, patience, willingness to understand and a commitment to working out responses in a new way,” the document said.

“Listening transforms the heart of those who live it, above all when they take on an inner attitude of harmony and docility to the Spirit of Christ.”

The bishops said they heard from many young people a need for “courageous cultural conversion and a change in daily pastoral practice” to promote the equality of women in society and in the Church.

“One area of particular importance in this regard is the presence of women in Church bodies at all levels, including in leadership roles, and the participation of women in Church decision-making processes while respecting the role of the ordained ministry,” the document said.

However, the final document was amended before passage to remove one specific suggestion on where to begin promoting greater equality in the Church. The draft document had called for “avoiding the disparity” at the synod between the men’s Union of Superiors General, which has 10 voting members at the synod, and the women’s International Union of Superiors General, which had three non-voting observers at the assembly.

The document also mentioned that in some countries, young people are moving away from the Church or question its teachings, especially on sexuality.

“The Church’s response, the synod said, must be a commitment of time and patience as it helps young people grasp the relationship between their adherence to faith in Jesus Christ and the way they live their affectivity and interpersonal relationships.”

Church teaching that all people are precious in God’s eyes and “in our eyes, too,” the pope said in his homily on Oct. 28.

The Mass, celebrated in St. Peter’s Basilica, closed a monthlong synod on young people, faith and vocational discernment. The pope thanked the 300 synod members, experts, observers and ecumenical delegates for working in communion, with frankness and with the desire to serve God’s people.

“May the Lord bless our steps, so that we can listen to young people, be their neighbors and bear witness before them to Jesus, the joy of our lives,” he said in his homily.

LIVING the faith and sharing it with the world, especially with young people, entails going out to those in need, listening, being close to them and bearing witness to Jesus’ liberating message of salvation, Pope Francis said.

The pope used the day’s Gospel reading (Mk 10:46-52) and its account of Jesus helping Bartimaeus as a model of how all Christians need to live out and share the faith.

Bartimaeus was blind, homeless and fatherless, and he begged for Jesus’ mercy as soon as he heard he was near, the pope said. Many rebuked the man, “telling him to be silent” (Mk 10:48).

“For such disciples, a person in need was a nuisance along the way, unexpected and unplanned,” the pope said.

Though they followed Jesus, these disciples wanted things to go their way and preferred talking over listening to others, he said.

“This is a risk constantly to guard against. Yet, for Jesus, the cry of those pleading for help is not a nuisance, but a challenge,” the pope said.

Jesus goes to Bartimaeus and lets him speak, taking the time to listen, Pope Francis said.

“This is the first step in helping the journey of faith; listening. It is the apostolate of the ear listening before speaking.”

The next step in the journey of faith, the pope said, is to be a neighbor and do what is needed, without delegating the duty to someone else.

Feasts celebrate the communion of saints

This week, the Catholic Church celebrates two feasts that Protestant churches do not: All Saints on Nov. 1 and All Souls on Nov. 2. Actually, both feasts celebrate saints because we believe that all the souls in purgatory will be saints.

The Church has honored people who lived heroically holy lives since the beginning of Christianity when it began to venerate St. Stephen as the first martyr. For centuries, local Churches remembered holy people after their deaths, calling them saints and praying to them to ask for their intercession with God. Finally, the popes reserved for themselves the right to declare someone a saint.

The Catholic Church canonizes people not only to honor them but, more important, to offer them as role models. Those of us who are still trying to work out our salvation can try to emulate some of the virtues displayed by those who were recognized for their holiness.

"There are many more saints than just those the Church has officially canonized," says Rabbi Michael Lerner. "It is my understanding that that person is in heaven as he or she is enjoying the beatific vision of God. Naturally, we hope that all of us will be saints after we die."

There are various classifications of saints in our liturgy. The Blessed Virgin Mary is in a classification by herself since she is the mother of the person who was both God and human. Next are the Apostles, followed by the martyrs, those who died rather than deny Christ.

Next are pastors, and these include especially holy popes, bishops, priests, abbots and missionaries. These are followed by the doctors of the Church. These 36 people (32 men and four women) are considered the Church’s most accomplished teachers, whose combination of intellectual brilliance and sanctity has been of extraordinary importance in the development of doctrine or spirituality.

After the doctors of the Church come virgins, women who never married and devoted their lives to serving the Church or people. Finally, we have the category of holy men and women, which covers those who don’t fit into one of the other classifications. They could be men or women in religious orders, or those who worked with the underprivileged, or teachers. This is the category that married men and women are in.

With the exception of the Blessed Virgin Mary, there are no groups of saints that are ranked higher or lower. One of the things some people object to regarding Catholics’ devotion to the saints is the idea of praying for their intercession. That practice comes from the doctrine of the Communion of Saints that is part of the Apostles’ Creed. Catholics believe that the saints in heaven—and that includes anyone in heaven, not just those who have been canonized—can pray for us, just as those on Earth can do.

The doctrine of the communion of the saints also teaches us that we can pray for those who have died before us. They might be in a state of purification, which we call purgatory, before entering heaven.

The Catholic doctrine of purgatory is misunderstood not only by Protestants, but also by many Catholics. For example, they sometimes think of it as a place somewhere between heaven and hell, and it is not. Purgatory is the name given to a process of purification, not to a place the soul might go to after death.

Sacred Scripture says that nothing impure will enter the kingdom of heaven. But you and I know that not everyone who dies is worthy to enter into perfect and complete union with God. Nor has he or she rejected God’s mercy enough to sentence himself or herself to hell. In the process of purification we call purgatory, every trace of sin is eliminated and every imperfection is corrected.

The Catholic Church doesn’t say when this will occur. The concept of time is meaningless in eternity. Perhaps it occurs immediately after death or even in the process of dying. We don’t know.

We do know, though, that, because of the doctrine of the communion of saints, the souls in purgatory are not separated from the saints in heaven or from us on earth. We all remain united in the Mystical Body of Christ.

Letters to the Editor

Not all initiatives in the world are equal

Like a bad penny, the "seamless" garment meme has been resurrected by a Criterion reader in the Oct. 19 issue.

Though the letter writer doesn’t use the term, he is moralizing about social justice issues with the fight against abortion, but there are no other issues if one doesn’t make it out of the womb.

They question if pro-lifers are really just pro-birthers. Yet fighting abortion does not resonate with the secular culture around us while other social justice issues do. Taking it on is a monumental task, and there are precious few willing to stand outside in the freezing rain or blistering sun to offer a loving plea to consider alternatives to ending life in utero.

Where the letter writer sees "protestors," I see peaceful and prayerful witnesses. Where they see a "Planned Parenthood facility," I see a chapel house. Where they see the moral equivalence of arms control, school lunches, the death penalty, the minimum wage, quality education and universal health care to abortion, I see it as the foundational issue that eclipses all others.

Even other life-and-death issues like euthanasia and the death penalty have not come close in their numbers compared to the millions who die in their mother’s wombs every year.

Our bishops have said the same thing in various documents over the years. How can the writer just drive a few feet past the scene they witnessed at Planned Parenthood, they would have seen the Cornerstone of Life and a sticker on the corner the First Choice for Women and the Gabriel Project. All extend loving and compassionate assistance to mothers in disturbing circumstances.

Then there is Right to Life, Heartbeat International, Right to Life, and 40 Days for Life and so many others.

Finally, not all injustices in the world are equal. The letter writer can make no apologies for being a single-issue voter trying to eradicate the worst injustice of all—abortion.

How do you vote? Reader notes challenges for today’s electorate

I am neither Democrat nor Republican—blue or red. I find no solace in either. Politics, it seems to me, for far too long, has been concerned with right or left, liberal or conservative, instead of right or wrong.

When I vote, I am usually not voting for anybody, but for a position. The difference between a liberal and a conservative is that one deliberates truth as an inconvenience whereas the other opposes it on principle.

I always vote my conscience, because my conscience is formed and informed in my Catholic faith—the principles of Catholic moral and social teaching.

I would love to vote for the best person, but that person is never a candidate. Under democracy, one party always dedicates itself to the defeat of the other party to trying to prove that the other party is incompetent to rule—and both commonly succeed and are usually right.

An election is coming. National peace and prosperity are declared, and the faxes have a sincere interest in prolonging the lives of the poultry. Politics is the gentle and skillful art of getting single digits for the poorest campaign funds from the rich, by promising to protect each from the other. I am an advocate of voting, but sometimes I feel like, if voting really changed anything, they would probably make it illegal.

Soul of America has been torn apart by evil of abortion, reader says

In an Oct. 19 letter to the editor in The Criterion, a grievance was made about how, in the perception of the letter writer, those who publicly protest abortion actions are pro-birth and pro-life. The writer assumes that those who stand outside of abortion centers to pray or offer help to women in crises do not care about born human beings because they do not support the policies of the Democratic Party.

There is much to counter in the accusations the letter writer sets forth, but because of space constraints, let’s stick to the most important fact and the heart of the matter, which is this: every single day, more than 3,000 children are killed by an abortion in the U.S., making it the single greatest cause of death.

Every single year, abortion kills as many Americans as have been killed on all the battlefields in all of the wars in U.S. history combined. Since Roe v. Wade became law in 1973, more than 53 million babies have been slaughtered. Approximately 52 percent of all African-American pregnancies end in abortion.

And it’s not just the unborn who are victims. The mothers, fathers, grandparents, and siblings of the aborted victims suffer greatly as well.

In fact, the very soul of America has been torn asunder from the fruit of the evil of abortion and the extended culture of death and violence that we see played out daily in the newspapers, if we truly reflect on what quietly goes on in the sanitized rooms of the local Planned Parenthood clinic.

The issue of abortion is the number one issue that must be dealt with and ended. If a political party is seeking to do all it can to keep the direct killing of unborn children legal, then, objectively, we must seriously question any claim that that party has the moral capability and integrity to craft policies that will ultimately help born human beings.

I encourage the letter writer to stop by sometime to pray and work with pro-lifers gathered outside of abortion facilities. We could use their help in this battle for life.

I’ll bet afterward, you can also join them at the local soup kitchen, homeless shelter or other places of ministry.

Todos estamos llamados a la santidad, a estar cerca de Dios

Archbishop/Arzobispo Charles C. Thompson

"Jesús explicó con toda sencillez qué es querer a Dios. " El verdadero anhelo de nuestro corazón.†" (Papa Francisco, "Gaudete et Exsultate").

Es por esto que Cristo nos entrega los sacramentos, especialmente en la Eucaristía y el sacramento de la penitencia, para ayudarnos en nuestras batalles cotidianas, camino a la santidad. Estamos llamados a estar cerca de Dios, pero para muchos de nosotros la travesía es larga y difícil. Afortunadamente, su gracia y su misericordia son infinitas. Nuestro amanamiento y misericordioso Dios nunca nos abandona. Incluso después de morir, los cristianos creemos que todavía podemos expiar nuestros pecados, ser santos y acercarnos a Dios. Es por ello que rezamos a nuestros difuntos y por lo que la Iglesia conmemora a los fieles difuntos el 2 de noviembre. Todos estamos llamados a la santidad y tenemos el potencial, guiados por la gracia de Dios, de llegar a ser santos. "Entre estos testimonios puede estar nuestra propia madre, una abuela u otras personas cercanas," afirma el papa. "Quizá su vida no fue siempre perfecta, pero aun en medio de imperfecciones y caídas siguieron adelante y agradaron al Señor." (84).

El papa Francisco rechaza lo que podría denominarse "el elitismo de la santidad" y destaca su presencia en la gente ordinaria. El énfasis en lo que los santos hacen es su secreto para navegar con éxito las aguas negras de la vida. "¿Por qué los santos pueden llevar vidas correctas y santas, en tanto que muchos de nosotros no lo somos en nuestras acciones y oraciones?" (84).

En "Gaudete et Exsultate" (Alegría y regocijo: Sobre el Concilio Vaticano II denominó "el elitismo de la santidad" y destaca su presencia en la gente ordinaria. "¿Por qué los santos pueden llevar vidas correctas y santas, en tanto que muchos de nosotros no lo somos en nuestras acciones y oraciones?" (84).

En "Gaudete et Exsultate": "El segundo mensaje de la Iglesia y de los santos es que, como siempre, el Santo Padre nos habla de la misericordia. "Mientras recordamos a estos santos, recordamos también que, aunque no sean santos, pueden ser santos—vivos y difuntos—que actúan como testigos de fe, que nos guían hacia Cristo, recemos para recibir la gracia de Cristo y su bendición universal. La misericordia de Dios toca nuestros corazones y nos santifica. Que su fehcaridad al llamado universal a la santidad nos acerque más a aquel que es el verdadero anhelo de nuestro corazón."

Pray for Our Bishops campaign set for Nov. 12-14
Pray for Our Bishops, a campaign of prayer and repairment developed by members of St. John the Apostle Parish in Bloomington, is being planned to coincide with the annual fall general assembly of the U.S. Conference of Catholic Bishops in Baltimore, Md., from Nov. 12-14. The mission of the campaign is to invite Catholics across the country to come to prayer and fasting during the three days. Participants will commit to withdrawal from the world as much as is prudently possible, fasting according to one’s means, and eucharistic-centered prayer with a special emphasis on adoration from 3-4 p.m.—the hour of mercy—each day.

In addition to Indiana, other participating parishes include Georgia, Massachusetts, Michigan, Ohio, Pennsylvania and Texas. For more information about the campaign, visit www.prayforourbishops.com.

Archdiocesan Ministry of Consolation to offer holiday bereavement support
The archdiocesan ministry of consolation of the Office of Marriage and Family Life is offering two opportunities for bereavement support during the upcoming holiday season. St. Jude Parish on 3535 Fairlawn Road, in Indianapolis, will host a support group at 7 p.m. in the parish Center on several consecutive Mondays beginning on Nov. 5, and an eighth meeting on Jan. 7, 2019. The group is for those who have lost a loved one and are looking to share with others who grieve. The sessions will walk participants through the process of mourning and provide support during the holiday season.

From Hollywood to sharing Scripture with Elvis: Mother Dolores Hart tells her vocation story

By Katie Rutter

BATESVILLE—Benedictine Mother Dolores Hart said that she receives many letters daily at the Abbey of Regina Laudis in Bethlehem, Conn., each requesting her to come speak at a different location. Most she must turn down, but when a letter from Father Stanley Pondo, pastor of St. Louis Parish in Batesville arrived on her desk, it touched her heart.

“I felt this absolute piercing sense of, ‘Oh my gosh, I can’t refuse him,’ ” she told the crowd gathered at the parish on Sept. 30.

“Maybe you’ve had the same experience?” she concluded, as the priest’s parishioners erupted into laughter.

More than 250 parishioners, community members and youths packed the pews to hear directly from this former Hollywood star who left the silver screen at the height of her career to become a cloistered nun.

Father Pondo had persuaded Mother Dolores to fly to Indiana because he was convinced that her story would help the youths, especially, understand that a relationship with God is the most important thing in life.

“She didn’t just say generic things like, ‘Oh my gosh, I can’t refuse him,’” she said, comparing the experience to that of falling in love with a spouse. “If I could be with him, if I could be with her, and for me it was, ‘If I could be with them, with the Lord.’”

In 1957, at the age of 24, Mother Dolores broke off her contract and engagement, gave away everything she owned and entered the abbey. In 2012, her incredible story was recounted in an Oscar-nominated short subject documentary, God is the Bigger Elvis.

“She’s just an amazing woman, and she makes me cry,” said Grace Eckstein, a student at Batesville High School and a member of the St. Louis Parish youth group. “She watched the documentary with other youth group members in the weeks leading up to the nun’s visit. As her pastor predicted, Grace came away from the talk with new priorities.

“Just discerning my vocation, it’s not about what I want, it’s about what God wants,” she said.

“I learned to just trust God because it was obviously a radical decision to quit Hollywood and become a sister,” explained fellow youth group member Adam Moster. Mother Dolores’s decision to leave everything behind for the sake of her vocation especially resonated with him: Adam said he is considering the priesthood.

“Thank you that’s better than your own,” he said.

During her second film with the cultural icon, she recounted that the two of them had to wait in a hotel room between scenes so that Presley was hidden from the ever-present crowds. Presley found a Gideon Bible in the room and asked the young Hart to flip to a random page, read the passage and share what it meant to her at that time. He then did the same.

Mother Dolores attributed her interest in the Bible to his love and respect for his mother, Gladys Presley.

“‘She taught him Scripture, taught him how to pray,'” Mother Dolores said, “and whatever was going to come up for him in his life, I knew that he had been prepared by God.

She herself was being prepared by God for her own vocation, even as her fame continued to grow. She explained that her friend, Don Robinson, proposed marriage to her, which triggered an immediate questioning of her future.

“Just discerning my vocation, it’s not about what I want, it’s about what God wants,” she said.

one of the greatest gifts we can give. To share the spirit of Notre Dame is what we do best.”

The concert thrilled Amy Sczesny, program director of A Caring Place.

“First, everyone knows of the Fighting Irish of Notre Dame, so who would not want the great opportunity to host the band at their facility?” she said. “Second, for our folks, music is a great means of communication. Our folks love music of any type, and you’ll see their faces light up when the first note is played.”

She also wanted to add another special note to the concert, so she invited students from nearby St. Thomas Aquinas School for the performance—to create an atmosphere that joined several generations.

“‘It was invigorating,’” Sczesny said. “We do great things here, and this concert is just one of those great things. Programs like this keep our participants active in—and with—the community. Our folks were all smiling, and the students, too.”

The band members also savored that experience.

“It was really wonderful to see all their smiles and their signs,” Braschler said. “It’s nice to see people of different generations, to bring joy to their day. And it brings joy to us.”

After the mini-concert and a question-and-answer session between the audience and the band members ended, Sczesny made one more request for an encore performance of the “Notre Dame Victory March.”

Almost immediately, the church rocked off again with the school’s fight song, with everyone in the audience smiling and clapping.

“Every time we play the fight song, it can be someone’s first time hearing it and someone’s last time hearing it, so we never go through the motions with it,” Braschler noted. “It was cool to have the youngest and oldest together here. That’s the power of music—to bring people together.”

Sczesny also saw a special power in the band members who shared their different gifts during their time in Indianapolis.

Sister Jennifer Mechtild. “We [sisters] are so our hospitality to others is right,” says Grove monastery show each other, she value.’ “

Treating all as ‘vessels of the altar’

“For your theme, you have taken an exhortation from the fifty-third chapter of the Rule of Saint Benedict: ‘All are to be welcomed as Christ.’ This expression has given the Benedictine Order a remarkable vocation to hospitality, in obedience to those words of the Lord Jesus: ‘I was a stranger and you welcomed me’ [Matt. 25:35].” —Address of Pope Francis at the International Communion of Benedictines

When reflecting on the pope’s address to the Benedictine sisters, one message particularly touched Sister Jennifer Mechtild.

“He said, ‘Your life in community bears witness to the importance of mutual love and respect. … The way you accept one another is the first sign you offer in a world that finds it hard to live out this value.’”

That mutual love and respect plays out in the hospitality the sisters in the Beech Grove monastery show each other, she says.

“Hospitality to each other comes first, so our hospitality to others is right,” says Sister Jennifer Mechtild. “We [sisters] are all different—we’re not a cookie-cutter community. Hospitality opens our hearts to each other.”

Sister Sheila Marie agrees, noting, “If we can’t be hospitable with ourselves, how can we be hospitable with others?”

That hospitality is then extended to all who visit Our Lady of Grace Monastery and its two corporate ministries: the Benedict Inn Retreat & Conference Center and the St. Paul Hermitage home for the elderly, buildings which form parentheses around the monastery in Beech Grove.

“In today’s world, the call for hospitality is so needed,” says Sister Jennifer Mechtild. “You see the need for that in the way people speak to each other today or in politics. How we speak to each other is very important.”

“People say they feel our hospitality when they come [to the monastery] for prayer or a program or to visit. And that hospitality extends outside of the monastery to the places where the sisters work.”

Sister Sheila Marie works at the retreat center, where she says it is “very easy to see hospitality in the sense of how we put people at ease.”

“The Rule of St. Benedict states that ‘all things should be cared for as vessels of the altar,’” says Sister Jennifer Mechtild. “Think of how careful you would be with the altar,” says Sister Jennifer Mechtild. “You see the need for that in the way people speak to each other today or in politics. How we speak to each other is very important.”

“The same concept applies to all things, she says, including the Earth.

“Creation is a community we belong to”

“I want to thank you for the special care you show toward the environment and for your efforts to protect the gifts of the earth, so that they can be shared by all.” —Address of Pope Francis at the International Communion of Benedictines

Care for creation is “something close to my heart,” says Sister Sheila Marie.

“In The Rule it says to receive all as Christ, and I see it as also receiving all of creation as Christ. … We see creation as a community to which we belong and treat it with the love and respect that we treat all people. It’s about right relationship with each other, with God, with ourselves, with creation.”

Sister Sheila Marie has taken on a special role in caring for creation at the monastery. When the sisters had a

Seminarians set an inspiring example during a difficult time in the Church

By Fr. Eric Augenstein

I love being a priest. I cannot imagine my life in any other way. And I truly believe that God has both called me to this vocation, and gives me the grace and strength to follow that call.

But it’s not always easy. Some days feel more like Good Friday than Holy Thursday. Some days are more marked with the silence of Holy Saturday than the joy of Easter Sunday.

As priests—we are Christians—we are configured to the totality of the Paschal Mystery of Jesus Christ, and it is only through that Paschal Mystery that this life—our lives—have meaning. It is good to remember that, especially in these days.

As I have visited with our seminarians this fall, the conversation has often turned to the challenges faced by the Church as we confront the reality of sexual abuse of minors by clergy, priests and bishops who have broken their promises and shattered the trust that was placed in them, and what could be perceived as an uncertain future for the Church and the priesthood in this country.

In the midst of many questions and not many answers, 23 young men have committed themselves to actively discerning the priesthood for the Archdiocese of Indianapolis as seminarians. Just as many young men and women from our archdiocese are in formation for religious life. It is not an easy time to be a priest or a seminarian. It is not an easy time to be Catholic.

Our seminarians inspire me. They feel and understand the hurt and anger that permeates the Church and the priesthood in these days. At the same time, they feel and understand in the depths of their hearts a call to be a part of the solution to a moral crisis in the Church.

They hear God calling them to step into a hurting world as instruments of God’s grace and mercy. They long to show people the face of Jesus Christ. They are striving to grow in holiness and virtue. They are good, faithful men, and our Church will be blessed by those who will serve us as priests.

In the Liturgy of the Hours a few weeks ago, we read the Old Testament story of Esther, a Jewish woman who became queen at a time when an order had been issued to kill the entire Jewish people in the kingdom of Persia. Esther is asked to go to the king to intercede for the lives of her people. When she hesitates, her uncle tells her, “Who

Benedictine sisters reflect on values promoted in order’s Rule

NEW CASTLE—Pope Francis famously said two weeks after he was elected in 2013 as bishop of Rome that priests should be “shepherds living with the smell of the sheep,” remaining close to the people to whom they minister.

When Jim O’Connell, a member of Our Lord Jesus Christ the King Parish in Paoli, thinks of this evocative image of the priesthood, his mind turns to Father John Hall, who served as his pastor from 1989-2001.

O’Connell worked with Father Hall on the parish council, helping to start charitable organizations in Orange County, sharing in ministry to patients at a local hospital and reaching out to parishioners in need.

“When Pope Francis says that pastors should smell like the sheep, Father John definitely smelled like the sheep,” O’Connell said.

Father Hall said that “being with the people” drew him to Greenwood and St. John the Evangelist Parish in Indianapolis that Valuing priestly fraternity

He currently ministers as the pastor of St. Anne Parish in New Castle and St. Elizabeth of Hungary Parish in Cambridge City.

In addition to parish ministry, he has also placed himself among the people by serving at different periods as a local volunteer firefighter and serving as chaplain for police and fire departments and for a public high school’s football team.

From time to time, Father Hall prays to consider the effect he has had on people in their everyday lives through his priestly ministry in such a wide variety of settings. He has a hard time believing that a man as simple as himself would be given such tremendous opportunities.

“It’s awe-inspiring in just the little things that you’re called upon to do,” he said. “I have to be aware of the fact that I am bringing Christ to many different people. We’re human beings. The leadership of the Church—whether it’s a priest, an archbishop, a sister—we’re human beings. leading the people on this journey of faith.”

Valuing priestly fraternity

It was the humanity of priests that Father Hall came to know as a youth in Our Lady of the Greenwood Parish in Greenwood and St. John the Evangelist Parish in Indianapolis that drew him to the consider that God might be calling him to that vocation.

This happened early on when he would volunteer for tasks around the parishes. “He was around the priests more than he has just at Sunday Masses helped me see them in a different light at times, kind of their humanness,” Father Hall said. “As I went through the seminary, I saw them in their stressful times in ministry. But still, there was a happiness about them.”

Nurturing that connection with other men with the same priestly vocation has been a priority for Father Hall as far back as when he was a high school seminarian in the early 1970s at the Latin School, the archdiocese’s former high school seminary in Indianapolis.

At the time, Father Hall had difficulty in some academic subjects and received help from archdiocesan college seminarians. Looking back on it, he seems to value more the fact that they reached out to him than in the actual assistance they gave.

“They showed an interest,” Father Hall said. “It kind of set a tone. I kind of picked that up that to show an interest in people, to be encouraging to them.”

Throughout his priestly life and ministry, Father Hall has encouraged his brother priests and nurtured relationships with them.

Father Thomas Schliessmann has on numerous occasions ministered in parishes that neighbor those served by Father Hall.

During those times, they frequently got together for lunch and helped each other in ministry in their respective parishes.

“His outreach to fellow priests is just wonderful,” said Father Schliessmann, pastor of St. Lawrence Parish in Indianapolis. “I appreciate it a whole lot. There has always been a joy in his faith and in his voice.”

Today, the two priests are not at close geographically. Father Hall still keeps up their connection, and his relationships with other priests, by sending them encouraging text messages, usually on a weekly basis.

Father Hall calls this dedication to priestly fraternity “a labor of love.”

“‘We need each other,’” he said. “We need to be encouraging of each other. The support that I’ve received from many different priests… has been an influence to show an interest in my brother priests.”

‘Be there with the people’

It’s not just priests that Father Hall has sought to encourage and be present to over the years. That extends to all the faithful whom he has called on to serve.

Father Schliessmann has seen that simply in the places where his friend has taken him to share lunch.

“He just goes to the mom and pop places in town,” Father Schliessmann said. “He’s always introducing me to the police chief or to the mayor or somebody else. They’re the places in the town where a lot of people are, where a lot of the people know him. He gets involved and is visible in his community.”

“I just have wanted to be there with the people,” Father Hall explained.

In his priestly ministry, Father Hall has sought to bring Christ into the high and low points of people’s lives.

“Our hands are anointed with chrism,” said Father Hall about a ritual that takes place during a priestly ordination liturgy.

Through the anointing of a priest’s hands, “we’re bringing Christ to the people. Through our listening to them. Christ is listening to them.”

He also seeks to help the people to whom he ministers see Christ’s presence in the ordinary happenings of their daily lives.

“They can do that no matter where they’re at, whether it’s on a farm, driving 30 minutes to work, being in an office or domestic work at home,” Father Hall said.

“You live out the Gospel the best you can. You’re not going to be perfect. But how are you going to do it the best you can?”

Being present to the parishioners he serves has been challenging for Father Hall, who has been assigned to multiple parishes at a time for most of his priestly life and ministry.

“It’s like being a parent with multiple children,” he said. “Each child is unique. You’ve got to respond to the one that needs the most without showing the others that they aren’t loved. They are. This parish might need more attention today and so you give it. But you’re thinking about the other. Maybe tomorrow that parish will need more attention.”

In any faith community that he serves, its sacramental life is a priority. Even in that, though, Father Hall seeks to make himself available to parishioners.

“He was a man of prayer,” said O’Connell of his time at Our Lord Jesus Christ the King Parish in Paoli. “He had Mass every morning, but I couldn’t make that Mass. But he would pray with me in the morning and give me Communion before he celebrated Mass. He was always available for that.”

Father Hall knows that the liturgy is at the heart of the faith of the people to whom he ministers.

“I try not just to say Mass,” he said. “I try to really offer it and get myself into the Mass. It might be my third Mass on a Sunday, but for them, it’s their only Mass, maybe the only Mass during the week.”

Just as Father Hall has focused on “being with the people” in his priestly life and ministry, he advises men considering a possible priestly call to be present to priests and parish communities.

“Find a priest that you look up to,” Father Hall said. “Offer to help out at his church, serving Mass, being a lector, an extraordinary minister of holy Communion. Don’t be a stranger around the parish. See what life is like as a priest.”

Seminarian grows closer to the priesthood as he nurtures relationships

By Sean Gallagher

It’s not unusual for a man called to the priesthood to first think about that possibility when he is in grade school.

It’s a bit more out of the ordinary for a young boy to think about being a priest before he’s even Catholic.

But that was the case with seminarian Matthew Perronie.

When Perronie was young, his mother, Kathy Perronie, who had been raised as a Catholic, was not practicing her faith.

His father, Brent Perronie, was baptized but not Catholic and wasn’t practicing his faith either.

Through the example of his grandmother, Leona Withem, though, Matthew came to know and love the Church while in grade school.

He went with her to Mass each Sunday. That was when he began to think about being a priest.

“Something about the priesthood stood out to me, just seeing what a priest does each Sunday at Mass,” Perronie said.

“I thought it would be pretty awesome to do that one day.”

A central part of priestly ministry is to bring people to faith in Christ and to welcome them into the Church.

Perronie has already done that by leading his parents through his example to embrace and practice the faith.

They, like him, are members of St. Malachy Parish in Brownsburg.

“Parents normally bring their children to the faith,” Perronie said.

“But I’ve been given the unique opportunity through God working through me and my grandmother to bring my parents to the faith.”

Relationship skills

Going to Mass on a regular basis with his grandfather helped Perronie as a grade school student come to know the Catholic faith and feel attracted to it.

That led him in the summer before eighth grade to seek to be initiated into the Church through baptism and reception of Communion.

This happy event for him took place on April 3, 2010, at St. Malachy Church.

He received the sacrament of confirmation the following year.

“I kind of felt at home,” Perronie said.

“I realized that God was the one who chose me. I was his beloved son after being baptized. In particular, I valued the graces that came from finally being able to receive the Eucharist.”

In the full communion of the Church, Perronie dove into his faith head first, learning more about it and building up a daily schedule of prayer that included the rosary.

Divine Mercy chaplet and reflection on the daily Mass readings.

“It got to the point where it was just too much, and I kind of entered a dryness in prayer,” he said.

“So I had to kind of strip some of that away in order to be able to come back to it.”

During his high school years, Perronie came back to prayer by discovering the joy and deep meaning at its root.

“I was able to see that prayer was not just saying prayer after prayer, but building a relationship with God,” he said.

“Prayer is to be in conversation with God, to grow closer to him. So when I brought back some of those things, I really focused on listening and being in conversation.”

While building up his relationship with God, Perronie had difficulty nurturing relationships with his peers in school because he was shy and reserved.

“I wouldn’t associate with people out of school,” he said.

“I’d go to school, come home and just be by myself with my parents.”

Perronie started to open up to others as he progressed through high school, this partly due to his continued thoughts about the priesthood.

Each summer, he participated in Bishop Bruté Days, an annual retreat and camping experience at Bishop Simon Bruté College Seminary in Indianapolis for teenage boys open to the priesthood.

He enjoyed meeting seminarians, the priests on staff there and other boys interested in the faith and the priesthood.

These good experiences and his growth in prayer led Perronie to apply in 2014 to become an archdiocesan seminarian.

He was accepted and enrolled that fall at Bishop Bruté and the nearby Marian University in Indianapolis.

Father Robert Robeson, Bishop Bruté’s rector at the time, had known Perronie for years through Bishop Bruté Days and celebrating weekend Masses regularly at St. Malachy.

The priest was concerned at first about how the introverted teenager would adjust to life in the seminary.

“He was very, very shy,” said Robeson, now pastor of Holy Name of Jesus Parish in Beech Grove.

“You had a hard time getting him to talk much at all. Not that he wasn’t engaged. He was engaged. He just really didn’t talk much.”

Father Robeson was pleased to see, though, that Perronie opened up to others at Bishop Bruté.

“His growth over his first two years in the seminary was amazing,” Father Robeson said.

“He came out of his shell and became much more socially confident.”

Perronie said it was challenging at first, going from being an only child to “having 40 brothers” as fellow seminarians at Bishop Bruté.

“I didn’t know what to expect,” he said.

“But I really just kind of entered into the life of (the seminary) and made a point to not be in my room very often. I went around talking to people, making friends.”

Being open to others

Building up relationship skills with other people and with God in prayer has helped Perronie grow in what attracts him to priestly life and ministry.

“The external portion—seeing what the priest does and wanting to do that—is still there,” he said.

“But it has kind of evolved into wanting to be with people in the most joyful and most sorrowful moments of their lives.”

“The priesthood is more than just celebrating the sacraments. It’s also being with people, being present with them and entering into their lives.”

Being present to others starts at home, and while Perronie was growing in his life of faith he was able to see his mother return to the practice of her Catholic faith and his father received into the full communion of the Church in 2015.

“Getting back in the Church and receiving the sacraments—it just seems that everything has come full circle,” said Kathy. “I just feel like Matthew instilled all of this in both of us by setting an example in what he wants to be.”

This experience in his family has given Perronie a perspective that he thinks will help him if he goes on to be ordained a priest.

“I’m able to recognize that not everyone, as they’re getting married and having kids, is interested in the faith or in God and raising their children in the faith,” he said.

“But there are always opportunities for God to work later on in life. I want to meet people where they’re at in that situation and to kind of give them my own experience to help them along the way.”

For now, Perronie is continuing on his path of priestly formation.

Father Robeson is encouraged by the way Perronie has opened himself to the formation process at Bishop Bruté and now at Saint Meinrad.

“That, in and of itself, is a good indicator that he’d make a good priest,” Father Robeson said.

“He continues to work on himself, to grow in self-awareness and his confidence in being able to minister on behalf of Christ.

“I’m very proud of him and happy for him that he’s well on his way for ordination.”

Perronie hopes that other young men who think that God might be calling them to the priesthood will open themselves like he has to discernment and formation can be life-changing.

“Be open,” Perronie said.

“Strive to develop a relationship with God. Go further with that and develop it over time.

Talk with others. God will show you the way.”

Providence sister follows God’s call from Taiwan to west central Indiana

By Jason Moon

Spirtuali To The Criterion

FTERRE HAUTE—From a very young age, Providence Sister Teresa Kang knew she wanted to devote her life to God. “When I was a child in Taiwan, I wanted to live a religious life,” Sister Teresa said. “I thought about religious life and used it as a learning goal. I wanted to be a partner of Christ; my life only belongs to him.”

And after attending a Come and See retreat with the Sisters of Providence of Saint Mary-of-the-Woods on the hallowed grounds of their motherhouse in west central Indiana, Sister Teresa knew she was home. “That night, I slept in the motherhouse of the Sisters of Providence,” she said. “I felt so peaceful, so much at home. It felt so familiar, like I had been here before. This feeling went through my whole body and soul, which I’d never felt before.”

That, Sister Teresa said, is when God called her to religious life.

Sister Teresa entered the congregation on Sept. 24, 2017. Since that date, her relationship with God and the Sisters of Providence has grown exponentially. “My life has taken on a different meaning from that day,” she said. “For me, every moment of life here is important. It is a gift from God.”

During her first year in the community—known as the postulancy year—Sister Teresa attended weekly conferences, which included discussions about life as a member of the Sisters of Providence. She also received instructions on living the life of a woman religious. “This helped me a lot,” Sister Teresa said. “My director [Providence Sister Marsha Spell] helped me to understand and adapt to life in this community of women dedicated to the mission of God. At the same time, Sister Marsha was a good listener who encouraged me to share about what I was learning and experiencing, and what touched my heart during the conference.”

During her postulancy, Sister Teresa also had an opportunity to expand her knowledge of the English language. “The community allowed me to enroll in a course at Saint Mary-of-the-Woods College to study English (English Language Institute Center),” she said. “In addition to studying English, I was also able to meet different people from other cultures, learn about their different cultures and build new friendships with them.”

“I was also blessed to have some of the sisters at the motherhouse tutor me in English. This time with them not only helped my English homework, but more importantly, let me know the talents, personality and the personal life of these different sisters.”

Sister Teresa also participated in some of the ministries of the Sisters of Providence, including the ministry of care at Providence Health Care on the motherhouse campus. During her time in the ministry of care, Sister Teresa said she began to learn more about the bond of the congregation through talking with other sisters.

“This ministry experience gave me the opportunity to get close to the older sisters and learn from them the spirit and the dedication of the Sisters of Providence,” Sister Teresa said. “For example, once I asked a sister, ‘Do you like playing Bingo all of the time?’ She answered, ‘Well, you know in community, relationship is very important … just like making a friend.’ Since becoming a member of the Sisters of Providence, Sister Teresa said her life has grown tremendously.

“When I share my story with young friends, they trust me not only because I am their friend Teresa,” but also because I am a Sister of Providence,” she said. “With this type of experience, I am now able to participate in the mission. “The call of God’s love is so strong that it urges one to seek God and respond. For me, it’s like that: Only by responding to God will I have that closeness and peace in my heart.”

Members of the Discalced Carmelite Monastery of St. Joseph in Terre Haute stand during a celebration of the Mass. Prayer for the Church and the world, both communal and individual, is the primary vocatio of the cloistered Carmelite community.

ST EREHAUTE— St. Teresa of Avila, foundress of the Discalced Carmelites during the time of the Protestant Reformation in 16th-century Spain, wrote that her community of sisters “would all be occupied in prayer for those who would be defenders of the Church and for preachers and for learned men who protect her from attack.” She went on to write that they were to “pray for the many souls that are being lost” (The Way of Perfection).

It was St. Teresa of Avila who, in the 16th century, wrote that her community of sisters was “wholly dedicated to him and to the needs of his Church, which are no less troubling today than they were in 16th-century Spain.”

In Carmel, we strive to live faithfully that call to love at the heart of the Church. We strive to be a loving presence to others who lack hope or who feel that they just cannot see the way ahead.

Through our witness to hope, we strive to encourage greater faith and trust in our Lord. When there is such discourage pressing in from all sides—from our government, our Church, our families, or our work places—community that is found alone is perfect and without sin. Standing in God’s presence, we keep prayerful vigil for all people, trusting in God and in his mercy.

Answering the call to pray, to love, to the vocation of Carmel, we strive to be faithful daughters of St. Teresa and live out her desire that we be “good friends of Christ” since he has “so many enemies and so few friends” (Way of Perfection). By responding to God’s great love for us, the commitment of our lives dedicated to prayer in community—loving our sisters, coming together as one—is but a small return for all we have received.

The inflow of our Lord’s Spirit assures us that he is always present; that he is always in the midst of everything that happens in our world—and that we have every reason to live in confidence and hope.

Carmelite nuns pray for the world ‘from the heart of the Church’

Pope Francis and St. Francis join priest on his journey of joy

By John Shaugnessy

As the crowd of wide-eyed teenagers rushed toward him with their cell phones already poised to take picture after picture—Conventual Franciscan Father John Bamman knew there was no turning back from the journey of joy he had just started.

It was November of 2017 during the National Catholic Youth Conference in Indianapolis, and Father John and a few fellow Conventual Franciscans had just piled into his brilliant sky-blue 2014 Buick Encore—a sports utility vehicle detailed with the image of Pope Francis smiling and waving on the driver’s door while a glowing image of St. Francis of Assisi beamed from the rear passenger door.

“I didn’t expect the kids to go nuts over it,” Father John says with a laugh, before recalling how he had to stop suddenly to avoid running over any of the teens as he tried to leave the parking lot.

“They saw the pope on the side of the car, and they all ran out with their cell phones to take pictures.”

“The kids wanted to know more. That was a wonderful response, for sure.”

So began what has become one of the great adventures of Father John’s life—the story of a former professional driver of semi-trucks and tourist buses who has spent his past year as a vocations director for his community, traveling around the Midwest with Pope Francis and St. Francis by his side.

‘Take our message to the road!’

In his 10 years as a professional driver before becoming a priest, Father John was often intrigued when he saw cars on the road that were “wrapped” with advertising images and slogans for such enterprises as maid services, real estate brokers and home improvement companies.

That approach stayed with him when someone suggested he do something “big and bold” in his role as a vocations director for the Conventual Franciscan Our Lady of Consolation Province based at Mount St. Francis in Floyd County in the Archdiocese of Indianapolis.

Father John prayed about it and thought, “It’s a really smart way of advertising, but I’ve never seen anything Church-related like that on cars. Why, don’t we do that?—hey, there’s a Franciscan in that car!—and take our message to the road!”

He shared his idea with an advertising company where he was told that research showed that “you have only three to six seconds to grab the attention of other drivers” with a wrapped car. Then, he said, the challenge became, “What’s our message, and what do we want to say in three to six seconds?”

The Franciscans assembled a think tank of people to answer that question.

The process led to images of Pope Francis because of his “magnetic personality” and St. Francis because, well, the Franciscans are named after him. The words, “Rebuild My Church!” were also added because those were the instructions that St. Francis said that Christ gave him when he decided to dedicate his life to God.

Printed in white, reflective letters, those three words become illuminated by the headlights of other vehicles at night. So does the lettering of the website www.franciscans.org And as an added touch to attract the attention of drivers of semi-trucks, buses and other large vehicles, an image of the San Damiano crucifix—the crucifix associated with St. Francis and the Franciscans—has been emblazoned atop the roof of Father John’s SUV.

For Father John, it all adds up to a distinct goal: “To bring a greater awareness of the Franciscan presence in the world.

‘One of the challenges of our time is to present the Church as attractive, current and engaging in people’s lives. This is one small effort to bring the conversations of vocation to the road and awaken the passion to serve the Lord with the zeal of St. Francis.’

The joy of being on the move

Now 51, Father John faced his own challenge of faith 17 years ago. He had a good life in his 10 years as a professional driver, but there was also a nagging feeling that it wasn’t enough, that he was expendable.

“If I didn’t show up, they’d just find another bus driver,” he says. “It wasn’t my calling. I didn’t have that joy, that passion. I felt God was calling me to something more.”

So at 34, he considered a path of life that had been part of his thoughts since he was in the fourth grade—the priesthood.

“I couldn’t put it off anymore. I asked, ‘God, where are you leading me?’ He had a response for me; I don’t think he gave me an answer. He said, ‘I have an exciting, passionate vocation for you if you will turn to me.’”

He began his journey as a Franciscan in 2001. Eight years later, he was ordained.

“It was like God was preparing me for this life all along.”

One of the parts of his life as a Franciscan that he enjoys is “being on the move”—an approach to life that he associates with the life of St. Francis.

“He’s on the move about three weeks of every month as a vocations director. His work not only leads him down the road, it takes the self-described introvert to new places within himself.”

He became Pope Francis because, well, the Franciscans are named after him. The words, “Rebuild My Church!” were also added because those were the instructions that St. Francis said that Christ gave him when he decided to dedicate his life to God.

For Father John, it all adds up to the move—a path that’s a fearful and challenging place to call one’s home.

“One of the parts of his life as a Franciscan that he enjoys is ‘being on the move’—an approach to life that he associates with the life of St. Francis.

“He’s on the move about three weeks of every month as a vocations director. His work not only leads him down the road, it takes the self-described introvert to new places within himself.”

It’s an adventure marked with moments of humor, too.

“Look, there’s Pope Francis!”

As Father John laughs, he recalls the time he made a rest stop next to a car filled with children in the backseat who shouted, “Dad! Dad! Look, there’s Pope Francis!”

There have also been times when he’s made a quick pit stop on the road, and as he exits his vehicle to rush to the restroom someone will want to talk to him about the vehicle, the faith and the Franciscans. So he does.

“Generally, people are curious, and they want to talk to you if they have time.”

Driving with Pope Francis and St. Francis has also made him more conscious of the way he drives.

“I drive more in line with the speed limit. And I don’t cut anyone off because it would leave a bad feeling to be cut off by the pope,” he says with a laugh.

He laughs again a moment later after he says, “And no non-verbal communication from me. I just wave, and it’s a five-finger wave.”

He views his adventures as one more avenue for advertising the faith and the Franciscan way of life.

“We have a retail space in a shopping mall in Syracuse, NY. They have Mass every day and confession every day. It’s constantly busy.”

Father John even dreamed of one day having a booth at Lucas Oil Stadium, home of the Indianapolis Colts football team.

‘A joyful message of how to live our lives’

While Pope Francis and St. Francis are just images on his car, Father John still believes both are a real part of his daily journey as a Franciscan.

“St. Francis had a joyful abundance about him that was so attractive. People liked him so much that they didn’t want to leave him. Even animals and birds sensed this guy was something special and unique. I love that quality of joy. I see Pope Francis having it, too. He writes an [apostolic exhortation] called, ‘The Joy of the Gospel.’ What a great drum to beat! It’s a joyful message of how to live our lives.”

That emphasis on how to live is also a part of the card that Father John gives to people he meets during his travels. The card includes this quote from Frederick Buechner: “Your vocation is the place God calls you to where your deepest concerns meet the world’s deepest hunger.”

“We all called to make the world a better place,” Father John says, stressing that it’s true whether our vocation is as a priest, a religious, a married person or a single person.

“It’s about following the Lord. He doesn’t demand a little of us. He demands all of us. I’m an adventurer at heart. When you have the challenge to throw yourself into something, to be all in, I love that.”

So his journey of joy continues, in the hope that his travels will lead the people he meets closer to God.

“I’m just a reminder to live the Gospel every day and donate your gifts back to the one who gave them to you.”

“I’d like to be a reminder of the good in people—and how everybody is called to that holiness.”

Deacon seeks to apply judicial experience to corrections ministry

By Katie Rutter

PECIAL TO THE CRITERION

BLOOMINGTON—Deacon Marc Kellams has never believed that his job was to simply punish those who had committed a crime. His mission during nearly four decades as a Monroe County judge, most recently at its Circuit Court handling criminal cases, was to help others.

“Our primary responsibility is to protect the public, but we also have a secondary responsibility to help the person that’s in before us to become a better person,” he said, speaking in his Bloomington office at the Monroe County Zietlow Justice Building on Oct. 15.

“If I can help somebody become a better person, then they’re better off, their family is better off and we as a community are better off,” he said.

This servant mindset has led Deacon Kellams to a new role with very much the same aim. On Dec. 31, Deacon Kellams will retire from his judicial profession and become the new coordinator of Corrections Ministries for the archdiocese. As such, he will help to organize and support Catholics who visit jails and prisons to care for the spiritual and emotional needs of incarcerated persons.

“He has a heart for the incarcerated, and he wants to try to help people find their way out of the system and back into the world,” said Deacon Steve Gretencord. A member of Sacred Heart of Jesus Parish in Terre Haute, Deacon Gretencord has ministered in the Federal Correction Institution in his hometown for eight years.

Both Deacon Gretencord and Deacon Kellams were ordained in 2008 in the first class of permanent deacons for the archdiocese. Permanent deacons typically have other full-time professions and are ordained to help meet the needs of their communities.

In addition to serving in a wide variety of ministries, deacons have the authority to preach at Masses, to administer the sacraments of baptism and matrimony and to conduct funeral services.

Deacon Kellams serves at St. Charles Borromeo Parish in Bloomington. He was also deeply involved in ministry to the hospitalized and to families grieving the death of a loved one. When he learned that the archdiocese needed a new coordinator for corrections ministries, Deacon Kellams felt that the position would be a perfect combination of his profession and his ministry as a deacon.

“Few people know the hearts of a person who has committed a crime better than a criminal court judge,” he said.

“I deal with them on probation and when they make mistakes… I congratulate them for successes. I let them know that I care about them as people and I want them to be successful,” he explained.

That care for the individual, he says, is how his faith played a role in his decisions from the bench. He utilized a variety of different requirements, such as counseling, home monitoring and drug rehabilitation, to supplement or replace incarceration in any situation possible.

Deacon Kellams will be present at the second archdiocesan Corrections Ministry Conference, which will take place at the St. Paul Catholic Center, 1413 E. 17th St., in Bloomington, at 8:30 a.m. on Nov. 3. He also plans to coordinate similar efforts in the future to continue the outreach already taking root in this archdiocese.

Most of all, Deacon Kellams hopes to do “the same thing that every Christian hopes to do: ‘That is, to bring the love of Christ to somebody else,’” he said.

Sister's outreach adds joy to her life and others

By John Shaughnessy

The connection with the young woman comes unexpectedly as Franciscan Sister Jackie McCracken opens a door and quickly turns into a hallway of the Village of Merici, a residential setting for adults with disabilities. Sister Jackie stops suddenly, her smile blossoms, and a second later she and the young woman are sharing a joy-filled hug.

If one moment can define a lifetime, perhaps that moment captures the essence of Sister Jackie’s 73 years of life and 55 years as a religious sister. It’s a moment of joy, outreach and service, a moment of connection to transform the life of another person is linked to the desire to have your own life transformed.

Sister Jackie has lived that focus on community, relationships and faith as part of the Sisters of the Third Order of St. Francis in Oldenburg.

“The love of the Franciscan order in general is totally relational,” she says. “St. Francis was in love with Christ and the Word made flesh. The incarnation is something we celebrate all the time in our relationships.”

That approach has guided her when she taught English and Spanish at Cathedral Ritter Jr./Sr. High School in Indianapolis. It was also there for the 14 years she was a member of the Senior Investigator team for female victims of domestic abuse—from being there for women during court proceedings to training judges and lawyers about the issue of domestic violence.

Sister Jackie was also the executive director of Indiana Campus Compact, part of a national organization that promotes service learning opportunities for college students, faculty members and presidents. And she worked at Cathedral High School, overseeing the care of the garden and facilities director for the Benedict Inn, Keep Indianapolis Beautiful. As an educator, she explains. “It’s about right relationship, responsibility, sexuality, financial literacy and gardening for the residents. As the villagers garden, that is as a group or as one, she soon talks about the ways they have helped her grow.

“She entered this ministry, I was nervous about it,” she says. “I consider myself a teacher. I was really intent on treating them just like I would anyone else. I talk to them, challenge them, get mad at them, and treat them like I would want to be treated.”

Her eyes light up and she smiles as she continues. “There is a simplicity about them that I think Francisan would recognize in them. They’re great examples for me in terms of how to be humble and sincere. They’ve helped me to patient. I think there are some people who are afraid of people with disabilities. For me, they’ve been a lot of fun. There’s been a profound blessing in this for me.”

She feels the same way about her life as a religious sister.

“I thought it would be fun and something I would really enjoy,” she says. “I also felt I could be of service to the organization and the people we support.”

Originally founded by a group that included many Catholic families, the village is named after St. Angela Merici, the patron saint of persons with disabilities. The residence houses 22 adults who have challenges that include autism, Down syndrome and cerebral palsy.

“The individuals we support here are vulnerable,” Sister Jackie says. “They’re part of a marginalized group. They’re often taken advantage of. They’re lonely. They have lots of anxiety.

“They learn to live with people here. They’re making friends, and they really enjoy each other for the most part.”

They also have a friend in Sister Jackie, says Kris Kryst, program and operations manager for the village. “She definitely has a lot of impact on everyone who lives here,” Hayes says. “The number one thing I look for in someone who does this work is having a good heart. That’s what she’s in here. It’s her kindness, compassion and empathy toward everyone we support. She just wants to help others live their best life.”

Striving to do that, Sister Jackie plans programs on nutrition, stress relief, sexuality, financial literacy and gardening for the residents. As she mentions the villagers gardening, that is as a group or as one, she soon talks about the ways they have helped her grow.

“When I entered this ministry, I was nervous about it,” she says. “I consider myself a teacher. I was really intent on treating them just like I would anyone else. I talk to them, challenge them, get mad at them, and treat them like I would want to be treated.”

Her eyes light up and she smiles as she continues. “There is a simplicity about them that I think Francisan would recognize in them. They’re great examples for me in terms of how to be humble and sincere. They’ve helped me to patient. I think there are some people who are afraid of people with disabilities. For me, they’ve been a lot of fun. There’s been a profound blessing in this for me.”

She feels the same way about her life as a religious sister.

“As a student at the former Holy Trinity School and the former St. Mary’s Academy, both in Indianapolis, she was fascinated by and felt close to the Franciscan sisters who taught her. She found them to be friendly, open, “great teachers, great role models.”

Sister Jackie’s fellow religious sisters see similar qualities in her.

“I’ve known Jackie since 1963, when we entered the community on the same day,” says Franciscan Sister Jan Kroeger. “When she really believes in something, she acts on it. She’s done a lot of things to help women and children. And she has a real passion for working with people who are marginalized, as she does now.

“She’s also very strongly committed to the [Franciscan sisters’] community, and a very faithful friend. We keep in touch and share what’s going on in our lives. We’ve been able to do that for a long, long time.”

Looking back on her life as a religious sister, Sister Jackie once wrote, “I’m not sure that any other lifestyle would have allowed me the flexibility and encouragement to pursue the ministry and service opportunities I’ve been engaged in during my lifetime. I’ve grown as a person, become courageous, taken risks and become transformed as a result of the people in my life.”

“It’s a life that has given her a lot of joy, a life that leads her to promote a vocation as a religious sister.

“As a religious sister, she says, “You are part of something larger than yourself,” she says. “Whether you look at it from a social justice perspective or a spirituality perspective, we are ultimately bound together by that thread.”

Women religious congregations have a lot to give the world by the way of mercy, justice, love and peace.”

recreational facility on the grounds razed several years ago due to its high cost of maintenance, they discerned about what to do with the vacant land.

A landscape architect working on the project said the land would be very poor. It would be difficult for trees to grow on the land, he suggested of turning the area into prairie land.

“I felt like that would be something we could give back to the community,” says Sister Sheila Marie Fitzpatrick. “And also it would really be good for our environment and increasing habitat. It could help migrating birds and pollinating the non-fruit Keep Indianapolis Beautiful. As facilities director for the Benedict Inn, Sister Sheila Marie also is responsible for overseeing the care of the garden and the handicap-accessible trail winding through it. To increase her knowledge and ability in this task of stewardship she earned certificates as a Master Naturalist, a Tree Steward and an Aldo Leopold Educator.

“Chapter 31 of The Rule is on the role of the ‘cerealla’ someone who is to care for the goods of the community, to make sure they have what they need,” she explains. “It’s about right relationship, right attitude and just distribution of goods. “It’s a beautiful explanation of how we do stewardship in daily life.

“All we do hinges on prayer”

“The daily celebration of Holy Mass and the Liturgy of the Hours put you at the heart of the Church’s life. Every day, your prayer enriches the ‘breathing’ of the Church.” —Address of Pope Francis at the International Communion of Benedictines in Rome

When Sister Jennifer Mechtild reflects on her journey to become a Benedictine sister, she recalls what most attracted her to a life serving Christ in the order. “What drew me was the life of prayer, and that all we do hinges on that,” she says. “We gather three times a day to pray for the Church and the world. Community and personal prayer are essential.

“From that prayer flows our care for the world,” she continues. “You can’t live a life of hospitality without prayer.”

That combination of hospitality and prayer is lived out in the sisters’ open invitation for anyone to join them in the monastery’s chapel for daily Mass and twice daily communal praying of the Liturgy of the Hours.

Special public prayer services are also held at different times throughout the year. Some annual, such as the sisters’ Celebration of Light service in memory of deceased loved ones. Other opportunities for public prayer are offered as needs arise, such as the Taizé service for healing in the Church and for victims of clergy sexual abuse the sisters held in October.

“Prayer really is helping, even if you don’t see it in the moment,” Sister Jennifer Mechtild assures.

And the sisters’ prayers are continual. The process gained a unique perspective on that fact while attending the International Communion of Benedictines in Rome.

At one point, she says, “I thought of the sisters at home, and I knew they were praying for me. And with the time difference, I was praying while they were sleeping.”

“And that is when I realized there is never a moment when [Benedictine] sisters aren’t praying the Liturgy of the Hours somewhere in the world.”

“So now when I go to sleep I think of all the [Benedictine] communities around the world in different time zones, and it’s like, ‘OK, it’s your turn to pray now.’ ”

For the sake of His Sorrowful Passion...

Lanesville—St. Mary Church in Lanesville was filled to standing-room-only capacity for the vigil Mass on Oct. 13. Perhaps it was to witness 15 youths and one adult receive the sacrament of confirmation.

Perhaps it was to worship at the liturgy with the principal celebrant, Archbishop Charles C. Thompson. The more likely answer is a combination of the two factors—plus the capstone occasion of the parish’s 175th anniversary of serving as a witness to the faith in southern Indiana.

Lines of descendants give a family feel

Locally, St. Mary Church is known as "the church on the hill" for a reason—it sits atop a hill overlooking the town of Lanesville. Some parishioners call it the Schickel Church, a school, a convent and a rectory. The faith community obtained land on the hill sometime between 1848-1852, and a wood frame church was built on the hilltop.

It wasn’t long before the parish outgrew the small frame church. In 1859, the cornerstone of the current church structure was laid, and the building—though still unfinished—was dedicated in 1864. It is believed that on that occasion the parish—what had been known as St. John the Baptist—was renamed to St. Mary. Although no records exist as to when or why the name was changed.

In his homily, Archbishop Thompson noted that “through all those 175 years, rootedness in Christ has kept St. Mary Parish going.”

The parishioners decided to retain the 1860s walls while redesigning and rebuilding the church’s interior. “We think it’s beautiful because of its historical status,” says Schickel.

He and his wife Joan, 92, have been members of the parish for all 72 years of their marriage. Look for them at Mass in the second row on the east side of the church, where Peter says they have been sitting weekly for “about 72 years.” And with five children, 10 grandchildren and 17 great-grandchildren, they have a full congregation of their own, some of whom still worship at St. Mary.

The Schickels have been involved in numerous ministries during their nearly three-quarters of a century in the parish. But what the couple is most known for has become an annual tradition for 35 years: Each fall, the Schickels invite all the youths of the New Albany Deanery to come to their farm in the country for food, fellowship and Mary’s wienie roast, hayrides, “We still see classmates I went to Sunday school with,” says Peter. “And I see a lot of people come back during church picnic time.”

This year the church picnic was particularly special for the parish’s 175th anniversary, says Hublar.

There were pamphlets in the church at different stations, so people could take an historical tour of the church,” she explains.

The parish celebrated the anniversary all year with monthly events. One of the events occurred earlier this year when Sandra Hartlieb, adult faith formation administrator at St. Lawrence Parish in Jeffersonville, performed the one-woman play she wrote about St. Theodora Guerin called In Her Own Words.

The saint figures into the history of St. Mary Parish. In 1854, then-parish pastor Father Alphonse Munschina wrote to Mother Theodore Guerin, foundress of the Sisters of Providence in St. Mary-of-the-Woods, and asked her to send teachers to start a parish school.

The future saint agreed. In September 1854, she accompanied the three sisters she chose for the assignment on their journey to Lanesville. In her journal, Mother Theodore wrote of the sisters receiving “an enthusiastic welcome, being conducted to the commodious convent with a religious procession, and all these good people swept for joy.”

After 140 years, the school closed in 1994.

“The history continues on”

Hosting the play was “one of the highlights of the year,” says Conventual Franciscan Father Robert St. Martin, the parish’s pastor; Deacon Richard Cooper; Father Wilford “Sonny” Day, who grew up in the parish; Father John Voldes and Father Nicolas Aparcja Tzoo.

During the Mass, 16 members of the parish received the sacrament of confirmation, and the parish marked the 175th anniversary of its founding.

Based on the text, Father Wilford “Sonny” Day, who grew up in the parish, was one of the parishioners who received the sacrament of confirmation during the Mass. He is described as someone who is well-known in the parish community, having grown up there and later returning to participate in the parish life.

The Mass was also a celebration of the 175th anniversary of the parish’s founding, which is a significant milestone in the history of the parish. The festivities included a combination of religious and cultural events, such as a religious procession, a wienie roast, hayrides, and a performance of a one-woman play about St. Theodora Guerin, the foundress of the Sisters of Providence.

The Mass was celebrated with Archdiocese of Indianapolis Archbishop Charles C. Thompson and the priests concelebrating with him. The homily reflected on the history of the parish and the role of faith community in maintaining the church and its traditions over the years.

The Mass was also a celebration of the contributions of family members, such as the Schickel family, who have been active parishioners for several generations. The Schickel family is credited with helping to build the current church structure and has been involved in various ministries over the years.

The Mass was well-attended, with a large number of parishioners and guests gathered to celebrate the occasion. The parish is noted for its strong sense of community and the traditions that have been preserved over many years.

The celebration of the 175th anniversary is described as an exciting event for new members of the parish as well as lifelong parishioners. The Mass was a time to reflect on the history of the parish and to look forward to the future.
They came to SS. Peter and Paul Cathedral in Indianapolis when times were good, be thankful for those as well. That’s what I think it’s just so important to establish those Catholic values when you’re young, and keep developing those values when you’re older, you become responsible and knowledgeable about others. … I figure if you can develop those values when you’re young, and keep developing those values among them, then probably the outcome is you’re going to be a pretty good person.

I now work through my Catholic education “just made me a better person, thinking about the Christian values to live by, and helped me make my decisions as I’ve gone through life. And it’s really helped me look for support when times get tough.

But when times are good, be thankful for those as well. That’s what I think about when I designate my money to the United Catholic Appeal.

All for the sake of: our needy

When Amanda Strong was young, she said her father was a strong preacher of giving back something to God to give you. So if God blesses me with something, I want to bless somebody else. This lesson of giving back is why the member of Holy Angels Parish in Indianapolis has spent years volunteering for Catholic Charities of Indianapolis, and more recently at her parish school, Holy Angels School, a Notre Dame ACE Academies (NDAA) school.

Her belief in these charitable causes is why she feels strongly about supporting them through the United Catholic Appeal.

The five archdiocesan NDAA inner-city schools in Indianapolis provide education to nearly 1,100 children as a first step in breaking the cycle of poverty. “I really want to see that school [at Holy Angels] grow,” said Strong.

But there are many others still caught in the cycle of poverty, she noted. In downtown Indianapolis, she said, “You can just walk down the street and see somebody in need.

“It takes a lot of dedication” to provide assistance to those who lack even the most basic of needs, she continued. “The archdiocese takes on the big stuff. No one parish could take care of that stuff.”

Similarly, no one parish could cover the massive effort of refugee resettlement.

Andra Liepa of St. Monica Parish in Indianapolis designates her appeal funds to Catholic Charities, which includes the archdiocesan Office of Refugee and Immigrant Services. Providing help for refugees hits home for Liepa on several levels.

“From a personal perspective, my parents were refugees from eastern Europe when the Soviet Union came in and occupied their home country [of Latvia] and they were forced to flee,” she said. “They spent six or so years in refugee camps, and basically lived without a home until they were able to get permission to come to the U.S. and start their new life.

Liepa also takes seriously the call for Christians “to welcome the refugee, the homeless, the oppressed. As Catholics, we have been called to share our blessings with those who have less, and refugees fall into that category.”

Like the Bergs, they consider each of the ministries to help clergy, families and those in need as “all for the sake of others.”

For some United Catholic Appeal donors, it is simply impossible to choose just one area to designate their funds. Like the Bergs, they consider each of the ministries to help clergy, families and those in need as important and necessary.

When it comes to directing appeal directions, Jerry Wagner of St. Patrick Parish in Terre Haute is among those who chooses not to choose.

“Any of the areas is fine—they’re all winners,” he said. “That’s why I leave it up to the people running the appeal. They know where there’s a need. I’m just fortunate to be able to help anyone in any of those areas.”

Black Catholics have made significant contributions to the Church

By Cecilia A. Moore

From the 1920s through the 1960s, more than 300,000 African-Americans across the country chose to be received into the full communion of the Church. Their choices to become Catholic set them apart from most African-American Christians who were members of Baptist, Methodist, Pentecostal and Holiness faith communities.

However, in choosing Catholicism, African-Americans were returning to the earliest Christian traditions of their ancestors. African Christians had figured prominently in shaping the Catholic tradition. They made their imprint on Catholic theology, doctrine and religious practices.

St. Augustine’s teachings on grace and sin, monasticism and traditions related to intercessory prayer are just three examples of African influence on Catholicism. Christian societies flourished for more than four centuries in Egypt, Ethiopia and the Sudan before Christianity had durable roots in Western Europe.

And although Muslims were successful in establishing their faith throughout North Africa and in parts of sub-Saharan Africa by the ninth century, Christianity did persevere in parts of Africa. By the beginning of the 16th century, Catholicism was reintroduced to other parts of Africa by way of the trans-Atlantic slave trade.

Twentieth-century African-Americans who chose to become Catholic were rich, poor, middle-class, famous, infamous, ordinary, eccentric, well-educated, poorly educated, southern, northern, midwestern, western, raised in various Christian faith communities, religiously unaffiliated, politically engaged, apolitical and so much more.

No matter their individual characteristics, they had their own reasons for choosing Catholicism. Some did so to answer a call to religious life as a priest, sister or brother. Some felt an internal need to gain the experience of Catholicism in America in the 20th century.

November is Black Catholic History Month. Why not use this November to take some time to learn about some of these 20th-century African-Americans who chose Catholicism and who made great contributions to the experience of Catholicism in America? Here are three that you might consider.

African-American children’s book author Ellen Tarry became a Catholic when she attended St. Francis de Sales, a Catholic boarding school for African-American girls operated by the Sisters of the Blessed Sacrament in the early 20th century. As a young woman, she got involved in the Harlem Renaissance and in Catholic interracial justice work. Tarry’s books for children featured aspects of Catholicism and African-American culture. She also published frequently in Catholic publications on issues that pertained to African-Americans. Her autobiography, The Third Door: The Autobiography of an American Negro Woman, is a fine way to begin learning about her and her contributions to Catholicism in America.

Several of the more famous African-Americans who joined the Catholic Church in the 20th century were in the performing arts. Mary Lou Williams is one of the most famous and interesting. Williams was a renowned jazz pianist and composer. She became a Catholic in 1957. She devoted the rest of her life to working to help musicians who suffered from various forms of addiction and to writing music for Catholic worship.

Williams came to regard jazz as a gift that God gave her to give the Catholic Church. Jazz inspired her composition of dozens of hymns and four Masses. The most well-known of these Masses is “Mary Lou’s Mass.” To learn more about Mary Lou Williams, I recommend Soul on Soul: The Life and Music of Mary Lou Williams by Tammy Kernodle.

Finally, an especially fitting way to celebrate Black Catholic History Month would be to read The History of Black Catholics in the United States by the late Benedictine Father Cyprian Davis, who was a monk of Saint Meinrad Archabbey in St. Meinrad, Indiana.

Father Cyprian is most well-known for his work in Catholic interracial justice work. His work helped give rise to Black Catholic History Month. But many do not know that Father Cyprian also chose Catholicism from the earliest days up through the middle of the 20th century. His work helped give rise to Black Catholic History Month.

Church and its members need to get real about our challenges

Tracking the Catholic zeitgeist these days can be a dizzying experience. It helps to have a sense of history, and perhaps a sense of irony as well. Once upon a time, it was liberal Catholics who were upset at the popes, because they called for more democracy in the Church, who railed against the Curia, and who wanted a return to forgotten practices like the election of bishops by the priests and people of the diocese.

Today we have conservative Catholics upset at the popes, because they call for more accountability in the Church, raling against the Curia, and wanting a return to forgotten practices like the election of bishops by the priests and people of the diocese.

A friend of mine has commented on the strange turn of events where liberal publications are now defenders of the pope, and conservative publications publish a steady diet of criticism.

A few decades ago, renegade bishops became heroes to some progressives. Now a renegade papal nun is a hero to some conservatives.

And all of this is occurring against a backdrop that unfortunately hasn’t changed—news reports of sexual abuse, accusations that a pope is not taking it seriously, divisions among bishops and between bishops and Rome. Maybe this is business as usual, but it is certainly concerning.

We are facing serious problems, there is no doubt, but they aren’t just the problems getting into the headlines.

That some priests, most but not all of them from years ago, violated their vows and abused priests, or even abused young people is undeniable. Equally undeniable is that the majority of priests have done no such thing and still deserve our respect.

That some bishops—through cowardice or bad advice from lay lawyers and lay counselors or corruption or even personal corruption—moved abusing priests instead of removing them, or tolerated sin against young people they knew there was no doubt. That there were bishops who did the right thing, who called a sin a sin, who might even have risked their episcopal careers to do so, there is also no doubt.

And while there are Catholics who are planning to boycott bishop appeals and parish collections as acts of protest, such gestures don’t hurt the wicked.

They hurt Catholic schools and hospitals and aid organizations. They hurt the priests who show up at hospitals to comfort the dying, who say Mass and hear confessions and also raise money from stingy parishioners to run complex parishes. Some bishops who are increasingly forced to be more CEOs than shepherds and who are less like anointers and more like anointed business owners.

We do face great challenges, all of us. The Church is in a faith valley.

I’m not wringing my hands helplessly, I’m not throwing up my hands in despair, I’m not cheerleading the end of the world, I’m not fighting this battle alone.

Nor is this just a battle I fight only after an eight-month trial, he famously said, “Whose office do I go to...
The Book of Deuteronomy is the source of the first reading for Mass this weekend. One among the first five books of the Bible, Deuteronomy contains for Jews the basic rule of life and the basic revelation of God about life.

Moses is central in these books. He led the Hebrews from Egypt, a nation that had been enslaved and oppressed, and guided them across the stark Sinai Peninsula to the Promised Land. He led them not because they had chosen him or because he somehow had assumed the role of leadership, but rather because God commissioned him. Not only did God lead the people to their own land (the land God had promised or them), but Moses also taught them how to live according to God’s law. Again, the teachings of Moses were not merely his thoughts. They were the very words of God conveyed to humanity by Moses.

In this reading, Moses, speaking for God, reveals the central reality of existence. God, the creator, is everything. Moses, still speaking for God, further reveals that God is one. God is a person. In his second reading, the Church this weekend offers us a selection from the Epistle to the Hebrews.

The loveliest and most powerful symbols and understandings of God and virtue in the ancient Hebrew tradition gleam in the Epistle to the Hebrews. The exact circumstances of its composition are unknown, but obviously it was first intended for an audience very aware of the traditions and beliefs of Judaism at the time of Jesus.

For the ancient Jews, from the time of Aaron (the brother of Moses who served as high priest on the central figure in Jewish society was the high priest. The high priest’s role extended far beyond ordinary leaders at religious ceremonies. He represented God. He also spoke for the people in acknowledging God as supreme.

This epistle sees Jesus as the great, eternal high priest. While the memory of Caiphas and other high priests was less than lustrous among Jews of the time of Jesus, because they allowed themselves to be tools of the Roman oppressors, the great high priest envisioned by Hebrews is holy and perfect.

Jesus is the great high priest of Calvary. As a human, the Lord represented all humanity. As God, the sacrifice of Jesus was perfect.

So Mark 10:43-45, the last reading. A scribe, an expert in Jewish religion, asked Jesus to encapsulate the Commandments. It was an understandable question. Jewish law, all seen as emanating from God, had 613 precepts!

In responding, Jesus drew upon two divine statutes well-known to the audience, one from Deuteronomy, the other from Leviticus. This unique technique situated the Lord in the tradition of revelation and defined that Jesus was no impostor. He was God’s spokesman.

Reflection

The Church is moving forward to the Solemnity of Christ the King, celebrated in part each of the 52 Sundays when we hear the Lord’s word.

As it approaches the end of the liturgical year, the Church, a good teacher, summarizes its teachings.

This is the summary: God is everything. Departing from God, disobeying him, brings chaos and doom. God guides us to life, as he guided the Hebrews to freedom.

He sent Jesus as our teacher and leader, as once Moses came to the Hebrews. The teachings of Jesus are simple but profound. Love God above everything, and love others as self.

In the Gospel reading, the common word is “love.” It is instructive in and of itself. If God is love, and if true disciples live by God’s law, then they will love God and all others. !

Question Corner

Fr. Kenneth Doyle

Staying away from the Mass deprives an asset of its spiritual benefits

Q

It pains me to read your question, and I pray every day for those Catholics like yourself who are experiencing doubts and deep distress because of the criminal and disgraceful behavior of some clerics.

It does little good to remind readers that the number who have been credibly accused of sexual abuse of minors represents a small minority of clerics—perhaps 3 or 4 percent. Even one case, of course, is too many—especially when you consider the lifelong trauma it brings into a child’s life.

I try to encourage people to separate, if they can, not so much—as you say—the “faith” and the “Church.” The distinction, in my mind, is between the Church as founded by Jesus and the human and fallible individuals who make up that Church, including some in leadership roles.

To answer your question, yes—you still have the moral obligation to “keep holy the Lord’s day” by worshipping at Mass. I can readily understand why you have begun to drift away, but that’s not really fair to yourself.

Why punish yourself because of the behavior of some clerics? Why deprive yourself of the benefit of the Eucharist, of the comfort that is offered from the closeness to Christ, of the strength for daily living that comes from being nourished at the table of Jesus? (Questions may be sent to Father Kenneth Doyle at askfatherkennedy@gmail.com and 30 Columbus Circle Dr., Albany, New York 12201.)

Church are leading many people, not only young people, away from the faith, the synod acknowledged.

Apparent responding to some bishops who felt the draft document’s section on abuse gave too much prominence to the topic’s importance in the United States, Ireland, Australia and Chile, the final document treated it in three paragraphs rather than the earlier five.

However, the final document, like the draft, said, “The Synod expresses gratitude to those who have had the courage to denounce the evil they have seen and who have made us aware of what has happened, and of the need to react decisively” to ensure abuse does not continue to occur.

Behind the crime of abuse, it said, there lies a “spiritual void” and a form of exercising power that led some priests to believe their ordination gave them “power” over others rather than called them ‘servants of others.’

On “vocation,” synod members emphasized how the basic, common Christian vocation is the call to holiness, which can and should be lived out in every state of life: young or old, single or married or in the priesthood or religious life.

“Vocation is neither a scriptural human being is called to recite, nor a spontaneous theatrical moment leaving no trace,” the document said. God calls each person into a relationship with him, respects the person’s freedom and invites the person to discover each person’s life: discovering that plan requires prayer and self-examination.

The final document urged particular attention to marriage preparation programs as a “kind of ‘initiation’ for the sacrament of marriage” and to careful selection of candidates for the priesthood and to seminary programs to ensure that future priests are men who call themselves to the gifts of others, relate well to women and men of all ages and are devoted to serving the poor.

Young people who are poor or experience discrimination—especially migrants, victims of religious persecution and those struggling to find employment—received special attention at the synod and in the final document. In the fact, the synod said, “the world of young people is also deeply marked by the experience of vulnerability, disability, illness and pain,” and Catholic communities have not always done everything possible to welcome and assist them.

Pope Francis holds his pastoral staff as he celebrates the closing Mass of the Synod of Bishops on young people, the faith and vocational discernment at St. Peter’s Basilica at the Vatican on Oct. 28. (CNS photo/Paul Haring)

Jesus asks Bartimaeus, “What do you want me to do for you?” (Mt 10:51) showing the Lord acts “not according to our ways but witnesses of the love that saves,” Pope Francis said.

“When faith is concerned purely with doctrinal formulars, it risks speaking only to the head without touching the heart,” he said. “And when it is concerned with morality alone, it risks turning into mere moralizing and social work.”

Being a neighbor, the pope said, means bringing the newness of God into other people’s lives, lighting the “temptation of easy answers and fast fixes,” and wanting to “wash our hands” of problems and responsibility.

“We want to imitate Jesus and, like him, to dirty our hands,” just as “the Lord has dirtied his hands for each one of us,” he said, “so as to reach pastoral choices, discerning, so as to reach pastoral choices, discerning responses in our institutions more than the friendly presence of Jesus! In these cases, we act for others but our presence is needed!”

Before praying the Our Father, Pope Francis said the synod did more than produce a final document, it displayed a method of listening to the voices of the people of God and discerning responses in the light of Scripture and the Holy Spirit.

While the document was important and useful, he said, the methods employed during the synod and its preparations showed “a way of being and working together, young and old, listening and discerning, so as to reach pastoral choices that respond to reality.”

The Catholic Tribune, November 2, 2018
VATICAN CITY (CNS)—Writing to the world’s young people, members of the Synod of Bishops said they wanted to encourage them and help them fulfill their dreams, and they prayed that their own failings would not drive the young from the Church.

“Our frailties and sins must not be an obstacle for your trust. The Church is your mother; she does not abandon you; she is ready to accompany you on new roads, on higher paths where the winds of Spirit blow stronger—swiping away the mists of indifference, superficiality and discouragement,” the synod fathers said in a letter addressed to young people around the world.

Cardinal Lorenzo Baldisseri, general secretary of the Synod of Bishops, read the letter aloud after a Mass on Oct. 28 closing the Synod of Bishops on young people, the faith and vocational discernment.

In the presence of Pope Francis and young people at the Mass, he said the synod members wanted to offer words “of hope, trust and consolation.”

The letter was approved by the synod, was drafted by an international commission that included four bishops, two young women—one from the United States—and an Italian priest, all of whom took part in the synod.

“Be sure to make the most fragile moments and the most difficult times your stepping stones to rise up again and to turn its gaze to light do not make all such tales true. Allegations end up in print.

When they are not true, someone is badly hurt. And the legal and cultural climate of the present; be a brighter future.”

Church and world need young people’s involvement, synod fathers say

“We wish to be sharers in your joy, so that your expectations may come to life,” the letter said. “We are certain that with your enthusiasm for life, you will be ready to get involved so that your dreams may be realized and take shape in your history.”

When the world that God so loved “is focused on material things, on short-term successes, on pleasures, and when the world crushes the weakest, you must help it to rise up again and to turn its gaze toward love, beauty, truth and justice once more,” the bishops told young people.

After the monthlong synod at the Vatican, they said, “we wish to continue the journey now in every part of the Earth where the Lord Jesus sends us as missionary disciples.”

“Apostolic Exhortation” of Bishop Luigi M. chester, the United States, and an Italian priest, all of whom took part in the synod.

“With the Church and the world urgently needs your enthusiasm,” they told young people. “Be sure to make the most fragile people, the poor and those wounded by life your traveling companions. You are the present, be a brighter future.”

The special letter, approved by the synod, was drafted by an international commission that included four bishops, two young women—one from the United States—the leader of the Taize community and an Italian priest, all of whom took part in the synod.

“...in every part of the Earth where the Lord Jesus sends us as missionary disciples.”
Just as the Vatican in early December lights the Christmas tree in St. Peter’s Square and the Holy Father reflects on the Nativity, so, too, will Archbishop Thompson lead an Archdiocesan Christmas tree lighting and prayer service. Music will be provided by Vox Sacra, the Schola Cantorum of the Archdiocese of Indianapolis.

At this special event, we will prepare our hearts for Jesus’ coming as the Light of the World and celebrate those who have shared their own light by establishing memorial endowments in the names of loved ones.

For a donation of $10 or more, you can dedicate a luminaria in memory of a loved one, which will be lit at the prayer service. Their legacy will live on as the gifts will be invested in the Catholic Community Foundation to support the growth of parish, school, and agency ministries.

To RSVP by Wednesday, November 28, and/or to make a donation, please visit www.archindy.org/CCF/EveningOfLights2018

Regular, weekday Mass will be celebrated at SS. Peter and Paul Cathedral prior to the event at 5:15 p.m. The Mass intention will be for loved ones remembered at the Evening of Lights. All who wish to attend Mass prior to the event are welcome.
