"Viva Cristo Rey! Long live Christ the King!"

Those words from Archbishop Charles C. Thompson’s homily during the closing Mass for the biennial National Catholic Youth Conference (NCYC) on Nov. 23 at Lucas Oil Stadium in Indianapolis punctuated a three-day gathering of faith for 20,000 teenagers, chaperones, clergy, religious, speakers and volunteers. The liturgy celebrating the Solemnity of Jesus Christ as King of the Universe ended the pilgrimage of faith.

And the fact that a 2012 film, For Greater Glory, recalled the brutal martyrdom of 14-year-old Jose Luis Sanchez del Rio of Mexico during the Cristero movement where many were killed for being Catholic, as Archbishop Thompson noted, opened the eyes of teens to learn of someone their age who literally died for his faith.

Though the young people who attended NCYC will, God willing, not suffer the same as now-St. Jose Luis (canonized by Pope Francis in 2016), the teens were encouraged to have the courage to live out their lives of faith in all they say and do. In today’s world, we know that is no easy task.

Their charge as they returned home was to harness the energy and excitement that resulted from the gathering, which offers so much promise for the present and the future of the Church. This year’s theme, “Blessed, Broken, Given” (“Bendito, Partido, Entregado” in Spanish) encouraged teens to use God’s gifts, not be afraid of life’s challenges, know they are never alone, and live out their vocation as missionary disciples.

We hope the stories and photos featured on pages 1A-12A in this week’s special keepsake issue of The Criterion paint a portrait of a young Church that is serving as a beacon of light in a troubled world.

The regular Nov. 29 issue is included as the center 12 pages of this keepsake edition. Although they are in the center, the pages are designed to be pulled out.

For more photos from the conference, visit www.CriterionOnline.com.

The regular section is labeled page 1B to 12B. Our regular features are included there: Archbishop Charles C. Thompson’s column, “Faith Alive!,” Calendar of Events, Opinion, Obituaries and other local news. We hope you enjoy the young people’s stories, their enthusiasm and their passion for our shared faith.

INDIANAPOLIS (CNS)—Here is the text of Pope Francis’ videotaped message to the 20,000 youths and chaperones attending the National Catholic Youth Conference (NCYC) in Indianapolis on Nov. 21-23. It was the pope’s first recorded message to the biennial conference.

I bless you with all my heart,

Dear young people of NCYC,

I send you an affectionate greeting and my prayers at this moment of encounter that you are living. May it be an opportunity to deepen your faith and communion. May it light your missionary hearts with the courage and strength to live in and with the Lord always as a Church sent forth.

Today, as in the beginning, we need to go out to meet each person, as it is our mission to do so, especially with those most separated and those who are suffering most. We must meet the existential peripheries of our world.

You know from your everyday life that many are alone, that many do not know Jesus. Go, go and take the world with you. Go and fill your surroundings, even the digital ones. Not of convictions. Not to proselytize. But to bear witness of the tenderness and mercy of Jesus.

I bless you with all my heart.

Youths share how theme of ‘Blessed, Broken, Given’ reflects their lives and their relationships with God

By John Shaughnessy

For 15-year-old Tabitha Njoroge, being together with 20,000 Catholic youths from across the country is a revelation, especially considering how much her life has changed in three years.

Back then, Tabitha, her parents and her three sisters had left their homeland in Kenya to come to the United States.

"Back then, we were struggling to have a meal," Tabitha recalls. "It’s partly why the theme of the National Catholic Youth Conference in Indianapolis on Nov. 21-23—‘Blessed, Broken, Given’—resonates so much with her.

"I’m blessed with my family. I really couldn’t be myself without them. They help me a lot in my life," said Tabitha, a member of Holy Angels Parish in her new homeland, Indianapolis. "And ‘given’—I was given a chance to come here to the United States to have a new life. It’s a huge opportunity.

She paused before adding, “It’s not like I’m broken, but leaving my family members at home—like my cousins—it’s kind of lonely sometimes.

Tabitha’s insights about her life show the dual nature of the mindset of the youths who participate in the National Catholic Youth Conference.

For three days, the 20,000 teenagers form a joyful, energetic and unifying Catholic Youth Conference.

At the same time, all of them come with their own stories of how the theme of the conference—‘Blessed, Broken, Given’—personally reflects their own lives and their developing relationship with God.

Consider the story of 16-year-old McKaya Ewing.

“In early October, my grandpa had two hernorroming strokes,” says McKayla, a member of the youth group from the Diocese of Saint Cloud, Minn. “After the second one, he couldn’t communicate. He’s still in the hospital.

“He’s a deacon, and he’s always showed us how to live our faith every day.

Everyone is praying for him. To see how God is working through him—through the power of prayer—I feel so blessed by that. He’s still struggling, but he’s still fighting, too.”

Fifteen-year-old Bryce Kuo chose “Broken.”

“That’s because I want to be better at sharing God with other people,” said Bryce, part of the youth group from the Diocese of Albany, N.Y. “There are a lot of people outside the Church who aren’t connected to God, and they could be if they had someone who could influence them.

“I’m blessed to have a connection with God and be here. This will help me be closer to God, and then I can help other people.”

Eighteen-year-old Alejandra Aguilar sees all three themes flowing through her life.

“I’m very thankful for everything I’ve been given,” said Alejandra, a member of St. Patrick Parish in Indianapolis.

“I thank God for the health of my family and my friends. I just hope I can give everything I can to others for all the things he has blessed me with.

“When I think about ‘broken,’ I think of all the battles he puts in front of you, but he knows you’ll be able to conquer anything that comes your way with his help.”

“She’s relying on her faith and God as she gears up for the latest challenge in her life—a challenge that she knows is also a blessing.

“I’ll be the first one in my family to go to college. It’s a whole new world for me. A lot of my friends have older siblings and parents who have gone through it. I have older siblings, but none of them have gone through this. My parents are from Mexico City. For me, it’s all very new.

“I want to give back to the community with the degree I get. I hope to be an immigration lawyer and help people through the immigration process.”

For 17-year-old Angel Rizo, there’s the knowledge of just how blessed he is.

“So many of us take the things we have for granted,” says Angel, part of the youth group from the Diocese of Nashville, Tenn. “We usually get things, but we never think about what God gives us and how we need to give back. I try to do that by doing adoration, praying for others and doing community service.”

“Logan Streuwing focused on ‘Broken’ as the theme that resonated most with him.

“For me and a lot of people, we all have ways we are broken,” said Logan, 17, a member of Holy Spirit Parish in Indianapolis. “None of us is perfect. God knows we are broken, but he still believes in us, and he still wants us as the best we can be. That gives me a lot of hope. Even when I’m feeling the lowest I can feel, God is there to pick me back up.”

Teens say youth conference impacted their lives in profound ways

By Mike Krokos

Megan Davis, Elizabeth Eberhard and Allison Dibble were fired up after the opening evening session of the biennial National Catholic Youth Conference (NCYC) on Nov. 21 at Lucas Oil Stadium in Indianapolis.

Forty-eight hours later at the end of the three-day pilgrimage of faith, the teenagers from the Diocese of Columbus, Ohio, admitted that their excitement had reached another level.

“It’s been amazing!” said Allison, a high school senior, after the closing Mass on Nov. 23 in Lucas Oil Stadium. “It’s just so incredible to see so many young people, all in one space, praising God. It’s just really inspiring.

“It took my breath away. I can’t begin to explain how much love there is [here]—and such beautiful community,” noted Elizabeth, a junior, of her fellow teens.

“Now that it’s all over, I want those three days—at least,” added fellow junior Megan. “I want more. I am super excited to go home and keep my faith up and help it continue to grow. It’s going to be an adventure.”

For the teenagers, who are members of St. John Neumann Parish in Sunbury, Ohio, the weekend included opening their hearts to God’s word and taking time to listen to the messages shared by speakers.

It was the second time Elizabeth was attending NCYC, and she was eager to share the experience with new people.

Both Megan and Allison were “excited” about seeing so many young people together living out their Catholic faith.

“I hope they go home changed,” Elizabeth added.

She was not alone in that sentiment.

“The best weekend of my life!”

Katie Kramer arrived at NCYC not sure what was in store for her.

She left with a sense of how to better live her faith.

“I think this is the best weekend of my life,” said the sophomore from the Archdiocese of Dubuque, Iowa. “I’ve met so many people, and I’ve gone to so many sessions about forgiveness. It really changed my perspective on giving people, not holding things in my heart, but opening myself up to [others’] perspective.

Bren Peters, a high school senior from the Diocese of Salina, Kansas, who attended NCYC two years ago, said she too wanted to use the opportunity to “grow in my faith.”

So did Matthew Uhlenkamp, a junior from the Archdiocese of Dubuque.

“I came two years ago, and it was just as amazing,” he said. “You learn so much and you meet amazing people.”

Area code 406 and a Bible verse

Caden Sova and Reece Donahue, both of the Diocese of Helena, Mont., attended the youth gathering in 2017, but this year decided that their time in the air would literally continue inside the thematic village at the youth gathering.

They both sported signs around their necks that read: “Wanta see a flip?” If a passerby said “yes,” they would do a back flip for them.

But there was also a catch: They asked each person to stop what they were doing and set their alarms to pray at 4:06 p.m. later that day.

“406 is the area code for the entire state of Montana,” Caden and Reece explained, “and there’s a Bible verse [Phil 4:6] about praying and giving thanks at all times. Hopefully, we’re going to have phone alarms going off all over Indianapolis.”

Both teenagers were moved during adoration, seeing everyone go down to the floor on their knees in worship.

Reece admitted he was looking forward to the closing Mass on Nov. 23 as well.

“It’s just so beautiful seeing 20,000-plus youths going down and receiving the Eucharist all at one time. It’s the best,” he said.
Apostolic nuncio exhorts young people at NCYC to know that Christ is alive
By Sean Gallagher

Archbishop Christophe Pierre, apostolic nuncio to the United States, told the 20,000 young people attending the National Catholic Youth Conference (NCYC) on Nov. 22 in Lucas Oil Stadium in Indianapolis that Pope Francis has shared with him his desire to be in Indianapolis with them.

The only problem was, the pope was scheduled to visit Thailand and Japan during the biennial youth conference.

“So, he said to me, ‘Go to Indianapolis and talk in my name,’” Archbishop Pierre recalled.

The nuncio then shared with his listeners a message from the pope given to him by Cardinal Pietro Parolin, Vatican Secretary of State.

“The Holy Father asks young people to discern—that’s a very important word—prayerfully—and another important word,” Archbishop Pierre said. “When you pray, you ask the Lord what he wants for you today. How is the Lord calling you to walk by the way of life marked by generous self-giving and faithful discipleship so that you may serve the poor and those most in need with joy and love.”

After sharing this message, Archbishop Pierre reflected on Pope Francis’ apostolic exhortation released earlier this year, “Christus Vivit” (“Christ is Alive”), on youth and social inclusion.

During his remarks, he interacted often with his listeners, asking them difficult questions, making jokes, often to much cheering.

“Because we’re young listeners as “the now of God,” Archbishop Pierre exhorted them to be missionaries.

“You are the most important part of the Church,” he said to the youths. “You are the most missionary part of the Church, missionaries to your friends, missionaries to your families, missionaries to the old people, missionaries to the priests. You know, the priests, they need to have you on their side, and also the bishops.”

Archbishop Pierre reflected on a quote from St. Francis de Sales, a French saint who died in 1622. “He who you are and be that well to give honor to the Master Craftsman whose handiwork you are.”

“You are all beautiful children of God,” he said.

Archbishop Pierre said: “You know, you are not beautiful because of you, but because God made you beautiful. This is the difference. So, we are proud to be who we are, because God made us who we are. And we are faithful to the will of God, to honor the Craftsman whose handiwork you are.”

He later spoke about the three primary truths of the faith that Pope Francis said in his exhortation that young people should remember for themselves and proclaim to others through their lives: God loves you; God is your Savior; God is alive.

“God loves you,” Archbishop Pierre said, later quoting the exhortation. “He loves you even if, at times, you sin and disappoint him or others. Pope Francis asks you to ‘trust that the memory of God never robs you of the gift and the treasure of your gift and your dignity and your love.”

“‘He restores our hope’

The theme of that gospel also became a focal point for Mary Quirk as she took the stage alone to talk with her fellow teenagers, knowing the challenges they often face.

“You are very beautiful people,” she said.

Archbishop Pierre asked: “Are you the eyes fixed on the outstretched arms of the Crucified One. He reconciles and saves.”

“I’m so glad to see so many young people excited and happy,” said Zapanta.

“Another surprise came from Pope Francis,” said Archbishop Pierre.

“The singing began with a growing energy, power-rock set of Christian music marked by strobe lights, a burst of confetti and singer Luke Smallbone leaving the stage to go into one section of the stadium, high-fiving his way through the stunned, delighted, amped crowd.

A message from the pope and a soul-stirring scene

“Another shocking surprise came from Pope Francis—a video message from him displayed on the stadium’s huge overhead screens, marking the moment the pope has shared his wishes with the youths at NCYC.

Among his brief remarks, the pope said about the youths and the conference, “May it be an opportunity to deepen your faith and communion. May it light your missionary hearts with the courage and strength to live in, and with, the Lord—always as a Church sent forth.”

“The pope’s words of encouragement sent a surge for the praise-and-worship part of the evening—and one soul-stirring scene that left the crowd in reverent silence.

In that moment, youths from across the country rang the stadium floor holding lit candles. At the same time, a procession—with a crucifix held high at the forefront—led a Bible to the stage for a reading from St. Luke’s Gospel, the one about Jesus’ encounter with two disciples on the road to Emmaus.

From the stage, Cleveland Bishop Nelson J. Perez reflected on the reading.

As he spoke at one point, all the lights in the stadium were on the stage, leaving the seating sections in a shroud of darkness.

“Pope Francis and the young people involved in the conference shared with you the same thing that Jesus shared with the two disciples on the road to Emmaus: ‘He was transfigured before our eyes and his face shone like the sun and his clothes became white as light.’

‘You are the missionaries of God is still with us,” said Mary, a youth from the Archdiocese of Louisville, Ky. “On the road to Emmaus, the two disciples were batting with mourning, with disappointment, with fear. And still, they encountered Jesus. And he spoke God’s word to them directly, and they had their hope restored.

Similarly, we walk long roads, hard roads, roads where we feel broken, we feel lost, we feel nervous, we feel guilty, we feel that maybe we can’t go on. But we do. Because it’s in these times that God comes to us. He speaks his word, and he restores our hope.

So the opening session of NCYC neared its end, the house band led the crowd in the repeated singing of the musical verse, ‘They word is a lamp unto my feet and a light unto my path.’

The impact of music even continued for many of the youth as they left the stadium to head to their hotels in a cold rain.

On one street near the stadium, a group of youths walked and sang. “I’ve got that joy, joy, joy, joy down in my heart!”

On another corner in front of the stadium, four young people were using the base of a street lamp to the tune of the “When of the Saints Come Marching In,” leading the passing youths to clap and sing along.

The soulful symphony of Catholic youths sharing their joy for their faith echoed into the night and continued throughout the conference, sounding a hopeful note for the future.

Shouts of ‘Viva Cristo Rey!’ mark NCYC closing Mass

By Natalie Hoefer

A spirit of joy permeated Lucas Oil Stadium as the call-and-response rang out. But it was not the typical call heard in the stadium home of the Indianapolis Colts. Nor was it led by any ordinary fan.

“Viva Cristo Rey!” shouted Archbishop Charles C. Thompson.

“Viva!” cried 20,000 Catholic youths, choralecons, volunteers, youth ministers and seminarians, priests and bishops.

It was the call of a shepherd during the closing Mass of the National Catholic Youth Conference (NCYC) on Nov. 23 in Indianapolis. And it was the response of the faithful—as well as several hundred priests and six bishops celebrating the Mass on the Solennity of Christ, King of the Universe, the feast ending the 2019 liturgical year.

In his homily, Archbishop Thompson explained that “Viva Cristo Rey,” meaning “long live Christ the King,” became the cry of the Cristero movement fighting for religious freedom in Mexico in the 1920s when the Mexican government severely persecuted the Catholic Church in the country.

During the war, the archbishop explained that Jose Luis Sanchez del Rio, “refused to denounce Jesus Christ as King, even to the point of death. Just before being shot, he said, ‘have shouted out ‘Viva Cristo Rey’!”

Jose Luis Sanchez del Rio was just 14 years old.

“He was canonized a saint by Pope Francis in 2016.” Archbishop Thompson told the youths, “he was one of you.”

The leader of the Church in central and southern Indiana expounded on the topic of kingship for the youths at the spacious stadium.

“The idea of a king tends to conjure up notions of power, royalty, prestige, wealth, crowns, riches, castles, servants and privilege,” he said.

But “no such notions” are associated with Christ, King of the Universe, he noted. “Our Scripture readings, particularly Luke’s Gospel account of the crucifixion, depicts one who was rejected, ridiculed, persecuted, and death,” Archbishop Thompson explained. “He is taunted, made to suffer and condemned as a criminal. Made to wear a crown of thorns. Thrust upon as his throne. Bloodied, bruised, beaten and stripped of every thread of human decency.”

And yet we worship him today as our king andavior, the archbishop said.

“Christ and his young Church are indeed alive!” he exclaimed, noting that at NCYC “grace has flowed abundantly in various ways, and hopefully we will all leave here richer for the time spent in relation to God and one another.”

He encouraged the youths to remain Christ-centered... and trust in the grace of the Holy Spirit that has gifted, sealed and claimed you as a beloved child of God. No power in the world can take that from you.

“You have been called to holiness and mission, claiming your place in the Church. Your place in the Kingdom of God.”

“Until next NCYC or we meet in Paradise, may each of us exude the joy of the Gospel proclaiming, ‘Viva Cristo Rey! Viva Cristo Rey! Viva Cristo Rey!’”

Franciscan Friars of the Renewal Father Agustino Torres and Katie Prejean McGrady, emcees for this year’s NCYC, introduced the emcees for NCYC 2021 before the final blessing at Mass.

Raucous cheers rang out as they called out the names of Society of Our Lady of the Holy Trinity Sister Miriam James Heidland and Brian Greenfield as the two ran up the ramp to the altar.

Father Agustino and McGrady prayed over the next two emcees. Then author and Catholic radio co-host Sister Miriam announced the theme for NCYC 2021: “Ahabe.”

“That means the Holy Spirit is going to come into your life, transform your life [and] set you on fire so you can call Christ to the ends of the world!” she cried.

Campus minister, author and national speaker Brian Greenfield added that the 2021 theme comes from chapter two of the Acts of the Apostles, “when the Holy Spirit came upon the upper room and blessed and empowered the Apostles.”

“We’ve got two years to get ready for this, two years for what the Holy Spirit wants to do. So what does that mean?”

“It means this: read Acts, chapter two,” he said, following a call throughout NCYC 2019 for youths to read the Scripture daily. “Prepare your hearts. Pray every day with all your hearts. Pray for one another, pray for us, pray for the Church.”

Archbishop Thompson also called for the youths to pray for their bishops, and also for the Archdiocese of Indianapolis as it prepares for the next biennial conference.

“Dear young people, brothers and sisters in Christ, your witness of being blessed, broken and given is essential to the Church, the mission of the Lord,” he said. “Now you can applaud yourselves.”

The quotation that ensued lasted several minutes. Archbishop Thompson slowly turned his head, taking in the mass of young people cheering and clapping in the stadium. A joyful grin spread across his face and shined through his eyes. The grin turned into a laugh, making the 20,000 youths cheer louder.

“You’ve been great, but it’s past my bedtime,” he finally said, still smiling. “We look forward to seeing you at NCYC in 2021, back home again here in Indiana.”

With that he said the final blessing, sending the youths out on their call “to holiness and mission.”

Two powerful moments stand out to Paul Sifuentes as he recalls the National Catholic Youth Conference (NCYC) in Indianapolis.

The first one occurred on the evening of Nov. 22 when the 20,000 youths from across the country once again came together at Lucas Oil Stadium, this time for eucharistic adoration.

“They had meshed the stage earlier to get closer to bands, but this time they meshed the stage to get closer to the Lord in the Eucharist,” said Sifuentes, the director of youth ministry for the Archdiocese of Indianapolis. “It was powerful seeing them try to get closer to Christ.”

The second special moment for Sifuentes happened on the closing night of the conference on Nov. 23, as Mass was celebrated for the youths from 145 dioceses across the United States and also from Australia, Canada and England.

“Leading up to the conference, we had talked about the highlight of the week needing to be the Mass, and the climax of the Mass needing to be the receiving of the Eucharist. And it was.”

“It was a beautiful service... everyone has a different experience of NCYC, and everyone is on their own pilgrimage, but we all come together at the end so we all receive Jesus Christ. He’s the one who unites us. He is who empowers us. And he is who sends us forth. And all those youths are going to receive Christ again when they go home.”

Sifuentes hopes the beauty and power of those encounters with Christ stay with the 20,000 youths into the future. He especially hopes that connection continues to shape the lives of the 1,456 youths from the archdiocese who participated in NCYC.

“My hope for them is that they had a powerful experience, an enriching pilgrimage, and that they see their life as a larger pilgrimage that they’re always journeying. There may not be the crazy hats and the crazy experiences of NCYC, but there are opportunities to encounter Christ and draw closer to Christ in their families, parishes and communities.”

He also sees the youths’ experiences at NCYC as an opportunity for their parishes to make a special effort to learn more about the faith-filled moments their youthful members had during the three-day conference.

“These youths who had these encounters with Christ at NCYC need to come back to their parishes and share their powerful moments,” Sifuentes noted. “Adults should ask them, ‘What were the powerful moments? Where did you see Christ?’”

Sifuentes also expressed his appreciation for the “okay, 900 volunteers who worked to help create a safe environment for the youths and the adult chaperones who accompanied them.”

“I am personally thankful for each of them. Their involvement allowed our youth to encounter Christ. And I think those volunteers would say they had a powerful experience themselves.”

He hopes the number of volunteers increases even more in the years ahead when NCYC is scheduled to return to Indianapolis in 2021, 2023 and 2025. “The more people we can have at NCYC having a powerful experience, the better it is for the proclamation of the Gospel and for the Church in central and southern Indiana.”

Sifuentes says that’s the ultimate goal for the archdiocese in serving as the host for the most recent NCYC and the ones in the future.

“This year we’re committed to youth, that we place a priority on helping our youth encounter Jesus Christ. We’re a welcoming community, and we’ll work hard and roll up our sleeves for people to join us here.”

Hundreds of priests share God’s mercy at NCYC

By Sean Gallagher

The National Catholic Youth Conference (NCYC) drew 20,000 youths from across the country to Indianapolis to be inspired by a wide variety of speakers, to be energized by lively, faith-filled music and to share in fun fellowship with smiling, happy Catholic peers far from their homes.

All of this often happened in the conference’s large and loud general sessions in Lucas Oil Stadium where all conference participants gathered several times from Nov. 21-23. But some of NCYC’s most moving moments were more intimate—moments shared among youths, priests and God in the sacrament of penance.

A large room in the Indiana Convention Center was dedicated to the sacrament. It had chairs where youths could sit facing a priest or have a screen separating them. For 15 hours during the conference, hundreds of priests were able to share God’s mercy with a steady stream of NCYC participants who stood in line for the sacrament.

It was also celebrated during the Friday evening general session in Lucas Oil Stadium where priests heard confessions in the arena’s concourses and on its floor as youths stood in long lines for the sacrament.

Father Timothy Wycziskalla, administrator of St. Mark the Evangelist Parish in Indianapolis, said the sacrament of penance “is one of the greatest things they offer at NCYC.”

“...is one of the highlights of the whole thing,” he said after hearing confessions for two hours. “You normally don’t see this. Thousands of kids and hundreds of priests all doing that together.

“It’s quiet and they experience the sacrament of confession, some of them for the first time in a very long time. It’s an intimate, private moment with them and God.”

For Allie Hale, a 17-year-old from Westphalia, Mo., in the Jefferson City, Mo., Diocese, experiencing the sacrament of penance at NCYC was moving.

“It had been a while,” she said as she walked out of the confession room, her voice filled with emotion. “It always makes me so happy. It’s a feeling I don’t get anywhere else. It’s so powerful. Every time I’ve gone, even when I was little, I just remember that feeling—and I wanted that back.”

Celebrating the sacrament of penance at NCYC was also moving for the priests who sat for hours in the confession room.

“It’s one of the main reasons I come,” said Father Jeremy Thiers, a priest of the Saint Cloud, Minn., Diocese. He has attended NCYC three times as a priest.

“It fills me with joy in my priesthood,” he said. “I’ve seen so many kids come that maybe haven’t gone to confession in a while, or just really want to unload some powerful and painful woundedness and sinfulness.

“It fills me with hope, because these are young people who have personal encounters with Christ. That’s what it’s all about—a personal encounter with Christ.”

Assisting in the confession room were several volunteers who directed penitents to priests ready to hear their confession. Many were archdiocesan seminarians.

“I can’t imagine how the Lord feels to have so many people coming so much closer to him in this sacrament,” said archdiocesan seminarian Benjamin Popson, a senior at Bishop Simon Bruté College Seminary in Indianapolis.

“I would imagine that it would be overwhelming for a priest in a good way, hearing so many confessions in a day. Confession is one of the more tender aspects of the priesthood.”

Popson also appreciated seeing the sheer numbers of priests in the confession room.

“There were so many different priests from across the country, from across cultures, wearing anything from jeans to a cassock and surplice,” he said. “But each priest is a tender model of Christ.”

Vocations at NCYC: Joyful priests, religious encourage youths to discern

By Sean Gallagher

The National Catholic Youth Conference (NCYC) held on Nov. 21-23 in Indianapolis was one of the first events that Father Michael Keucher, now coordinator of priests in the archdiocese, participated in as the new archdiocesan vocations director.

Holding a booth for the National Conference of Diocesan Vocations Directors outside a room in the Indiana Convention Center, Keucher shared with priests heard thousands of confessions during the three days, Father Keucher said NCYC is great for encouraging young people to begin considering God’s call in their lives.

“There’s a beautiful Catholic culture here that encourages these kids, who clearly have such a beautiful faith, to think about what God’s dream might be for their lives, what his plan is for them,” said Father Keucher. “You can see that the faith is alive in their hearts. So, it’s neat to see their hunger to discern God’s will.”

In the conference’s thematic park in another part of the convention center, members of several religious communities from across the country spent time with NCYC participants, answering their questions, sharing rosaries and holy cards with them and encouraging them to pray about their vocations.

“It really is amazing,” said Mother Christina Murray, superior of the Sisters of St. Joseph the Worker, answering questions about the church. “It shows how big the Church is and how young the Church is. There are kids out there who are on fire with their faith. But I think they don’t get much credit sometimes.

“When I was growing up, I didn’t know that religious life was an option. They have to know that it’s an option, it’s out there and that we’re happy with it. We need to plant those seeds and let them think about it.”

Not far from the booth where Mother Christina helped teens have photos taken of them behind-life size cutouts of nuns and priests, Holy Cross Brother Jimmy Hanke interacted with youths attending the conference.

He attended NCYC in 2011 as a student at Roncalli High School in Indianapolis and a member of Our Lady of the Greenwood Parish in Greenwood.

This year, he was glad to return as a Holy Cross brother in the second year of temporary vows.

“Planting seeds is exactly what it is,” said Brother Jimmy. “The students here are just beginning to think about vocational questions. I might be the first person who has ever asked them, ‘Have you ever thought about being a priest or becoming a brother?’

Sometimes, I talk about Holy Cross. But a lot of it is just inviting them to begin that discernment question.”

Franciscan Sister Kathleen Br ranham, vocations director for the Franciscan Sisters of Oldenburg, had many similar conversations at a booth for her community in the thematic park.

“It opens a door for these young people so they can think about religious life,” she said. “When you ask some of these young people if they’ve thought about religious life, a lot said they didn’t until they came here.”

Zander Jez, a teen from Houston attending his second NCYC, said the teens appreciated the presence of so many seminarians, priests and religious at the conference.

“It helps me to know that our Catholic faith is alive in so many different ways,” Zander said. “There isn’t just one way of being a Catholic. You can help in many different aspects through the Franciscans or the Basilians or being a sister.

“When you hear about discernment, you think it’s about becoming a priest or a sister. But it doesn’t necessarily mean that. It could mean being married and having kids.”

Archdiocesan seminarians have volunteered at NCYC while the conference has been held in Indianapolis. Some assist in the confessional rooms. Others facilitate breakout sessions or just help direct the sometimes massive pedestrian traffic at the conference.

Archdiocesan seminarian James Hentz, a freshman at Bishop Bruté College Seminary in Indianapolis, was excited to volunteer at NCYC.

Two years ago, he attended it as a junior at Father Thomas Scecina Memorial High School in Indianapolis.

“I remember talking with the seminarians at NCYC then,” Hentz said. “Now I’m in the position where I’m doing that.

He volunteered in the confession room and was impressed by the pastoral care given to the youths, hearing their confessions and ministering there during the conference.

It’s one of the greatest things that I’ve seen in years,” said Hentz, a member of St. Michael Parish in Greenfield. “One person is bailing their eyes out. The next person is ecstatic.

“You see them at the highest and lowest points in their lives. Seeing people how they come in compared to how they leave—they walk lighter. I can’t imagine how the priests are feeling, seeing such a radical transformation.”

Father Jerry Byrd, pastor of St. Mary Parish in North Vernon and St. Joseph and St. Ann parishes, both in Jennings County, volunteered at NCYC as a seminarian.

Now he’s happy to serve it as a priest.

“You come to this and see all the young people interested in the faith, wanting to live it out and to figure out how to do that—it inspires me as a pastor and wakes me up a little bit,” said Father Byrd. “If they’re seeing priests and religious that are happy, that love what they’re doing, that witness alone is going to be enough to inspire young people.

“That witness is really important. If we want to bolster vocations, that’s how we have to do it.”

Deep Dive sessions equip youths ‘to be vibrant witnesses’

By Natalie Hoeter

Katie Prejean McGrady articulated a truth about the National Catholic Youth Conference (NCYC) and similar events.

“Prayer is a must. ‘All of us hit these walls when we leave these big events,’” said the national Catholic speaker and youth minister. “We’re going to have to figure out how exactly to take what we’ve heard, take it into our bloodstream, and that actually moves somebody to want to look and love Jesus.”

Prejean McGrady recalled an NCYC committee meeting she attended some time ago.

“The thought was, what if we went deeper with the young people who were ready to go deeper?”

“A lot of NCYC is introductory. But NCYC is such an on-ramp for so many people who want to go to get that first taste. Father Agustino Prejean McGrady said the committee asked themselves, ‘What does it look like when you take the first taste? Do you throw you in the room and actually equip you to go and be vibrant, visible witnesses to the Gospel?”

And so NCYC’s new “Deep Dive” series of sessions was created.

“Deep Dive” is described by leading Catholic presenters about how young people—and anyone—can live their faith. Prejean McGrady said the series was created because it was recognized this generation could make a difference in the world.

“Evangelizing doesn’t have to mean ‘charge your phone. … You have to be a bridge, not a barrier’ for other people. It’s about how you’re worded, how you’re told, how you’re worded, how you’re worded, how you’re worded.”

In the final Deep Dive session, Prejean McGrady identified the young people present as belonging to “Generation Z,” those born in 1996 and after.

“Evangelizing doesn’t have to mean ‘charge your phone. … You have to be a bridge, not a barrier’ for other people. It’s about how you’re worded, how you’re worded, how you’re worded.”

For his last piece of practical advice, Prejean McGrady said, holding up the Bible, “This first suggestion was to read the upcoming Sunday readings in advance.

“The Catholic Church actually believes—this is so fundamental—that in the 167 hours that you’re not Sunday Mass, that you would set aside some time to read the readings of Mass,” said Hart in mock indignation.

Acknowledging people’s busy lives, he suggested reading each of the Sunday readings, including the Psalm response, on separate days of the week rather than all in one sitting. He also noted the availability of several free phone apps that offer the Sunday readings and reflections.

“Start with the Gospel of Mark,” he suggested. “It’s the shortest, easiest, most action-packed Gospel. And it has stories you’re accustomed to hearing from your kids.”

He also recommended reading a few verses at a time rather than the entire book or even a chapter, and to use the four R’s, “rectio divina” (“holy reading”) approach to reading Scripture: read the passage on a word or phrase that got your attention, respond to God in prayer about the word or phrase, and rest in God, listening for the response.

If the Gospel of Mark, at 16 chapters, is too intimidating, said Hart, “go to the book of James.”

“Buy books. Read the catechism. Put your phone down.”

Finally, she said, “You like to tell your story?”

Deep Dive sessions have been described as “five步s” to Becoming a Teenage Saint—“to help youths get to heaven.”

During one of the many workshop sessions at the conference, Father Leo stressed two points.

The first point he shared was, “Being a saint is our calling in life.”

The second point he shared with a question for the youths: “Do you want to get to heaven? Then you’d better be a saint.”

He then stressed that we need to be formed as a saint if we want to follow these five steps.

Reach out to God. “The first step in becoming a saint is realizing that you are not a saint and you need help. How are you going to be a saint if you’re not trying to reach out to God? Try!”

“Maybe you can try by reaching out to a summer or someone you know.”

How about this—reach out and call up your priest and say, ‘I know what I’m struggling. Help me. Reach out.”

Call out for God: “You got to say, ‘God save me.’”

“God is going to give you the greatest gift you can imagine—the gift of himself. At Christmas, God comes out of heaven and into this ugly, material world for ‘the sake of the world.’”

Be sanctified: “Let God come into your life and cut sin away. You don’t have to be in power, but God does.”

“We have a sacrament to help us to become saints.”

“Look for them in the confessional. For your generation that is dynamic and way that is engaging, we can change the world,” he said.

McGrady backed up her statement citing a poll of 3,000 Gen Z members in which 64 percent answered yes, they did believe they could make a difference in the world.

Second, said Prejean McGrady, is that this generation “longs for presence.”

“You’ve met Jesus Christ, you can’t help but give testimony to how he’s changed your life—and if your life wasn’t changed, then you haven’t Jesus Christ.”

These traits enable the young Church to imitate Christ, “to walk into the chaos and the mess and the noise and say, ‘How can I help?’”

Evangelizing doesn’t have to mean “charge your phone. … You have to be a bridge, not a barrier’ for other people. It’s about how you’re worded, how you’re worded, how you’re worded.”

Finally, she said, “You like to tell your story?”

“Buy books. Read the catechism. Put your phone down.”

Monk creates images to help youths encounter Christ

By Sean Gallagher

Lucas Oil Stadium in Indianapolis might be described as a cathedral of football since tens of thousands of Indianapolis Colts fans faithfully fill it for the National Football League team's home games. But the organizers of the National Catholic Youth Conference (NCYC) sought to make the massive stadium as much like an actual cathedral as they could for the 20,000 Catholic youths from across the country who attended the biennial event on Nov. 21–23.

Instead of cheering touchdowns, they wanted the youths to enter deeply into prayer and give praise and worship to God.

As that end, the organizers commissioned nationally-known liturgical artist Benedictine Brother Martin Erspamer, a monk of Saint Meinrad Archabbey in St. Meinrad, to create five stained glass-like images of the story from the Gospel of St. Luke’s disciples on the road to Emmaus (Lk 24:23–35).

Brother Martin spoke with The Criterion about how leading up to the days leading up to NCYC. In a way, he compared his art to the youths who journeyed from their homes across the country to attend the conference.

“I hope they move them to pray and enter into the mystery of the Lord, revealing himself,” Brother Martin said.

“These things tend to have for me a life of their own.”

“They’re like my children, in sense, in that I work on them and I agonize over them. And, at a certain point, you have to cut them loose. Then, after they’re loose, they’re on their own.”

The images, originally 28 inches tall and 10 inches wide, were created with transparent ink on paper. In the stadium, they were projected onto panels hung far above the stage that were 28 feet tall and 10 feet wide. They were also on panels 8 feet tall and 3 feet wide that were brought adjacent to the stage itself during different sessions of the conference.

The images of the disciples on the road to Emmaus were chosen in particular because the participants were led during the conference in privately meditating on that Gospel passage.

Paul Sifuentes, archdiocesan director of youth ministry and an NCYC organizer, is convinced that beauty is an attractive way to invite young people to enter into the faith and explore it within their hearts more deeply.

“I think they need to know that faith and beauty are expressions of the same journey,” Sifuentes said. “They don’t just intersect for a moment. Our faith should produce beauty.”

He reflected that sacred art is an effective means to help youths not so much learn about Christ, but to meet him.

“So often in our Church recently, we have often concentrated on how we can best tell someone about Christ,” Sifuentes said. “And we absolutely need to tell people about Christ and be able to tell a story.

“But we also need to know of the ways that we can say, This is the person who encouraged me and helped me to believe. It’s my way of asking you to help me encounter him as well.”

The form of prayer used in the conference in connection to the images was lectio divina ("holy reading"), an ancient spiritual practice fostered for more than 1,000 years by monastic communities like Saint Meinrad Archabbey, in which people slowly read scriptural texts and approach them prayerfully from different perspectives.

Tommie Bocht, director of youth and young adult formation at Saint Meinrad, was excited that the gifts of One Bread One Cup, which includes about 350-400 youths per year, was shared with 20,000 youths at NCYC.

“In an interview with The Criterion before the conference, she expressed her hope that NCYC participants would be as open to the Church’s ancient liturgical and spiritual traditions as those who come to Saint Meinrad for One Bread One Cup.

“We’ve found that young people are just completely enamored with them and respond really well to the monastic community,” she said.

Lilly Secrest is a two-time One Bread One Cup participant. She is a member of SS. Francis and Clare of Assisi Parish in Greenwood and a senior at Roncalli High School in Indianapolis.

At NCYC’s opening session, Lilly, two other youths and a deacon chanted the story from the Gospel of St. Luke of the disciples on the road to Emmaus (Lk 24:13–35). The youths that filled Lucas Oil Stadium in that and subsequent sessions were led to meditate on the passage through lectio divina.

In the days leading up to the conference, Lilly spoke about how chant and liturgy have become important for her through One Bread One Cup.

When I first heard about chant, I thought it was going to be so boring,” she said. “And that wasn’t the case at all. I can’t believe how many people that is cool and can help you in your own life.

“One Bread One Cup when I’m at Mass, I am so more connected and have much attention to what is going on because I see the beauty of the sacrament and that’s happening. I didn’t recognize and appreciate it before.”

Brother Martin said Lilly is not alone. Many One Bread One Cup participants have been drawn close to the Church simply through its worship.

“The liturgy is right there under our noses,” she said. “That’s the vehicle we should use and concentrate on to bring young people back to Christ and to keep them in the Church. We have everything we need. We just have to do it well.”

Brother John Mark was impressed by how well the youths in the schola picked up on the chant for the conference. They came together from across the country at Saint Meinrad for a practice in the summer and earlier this fall. Even though they had only sung together twice, they sang the chant well at the conference.

“They’re trying to show the kids that this is part of our tradition and belongs in all our worship,” Brother John Mark said. “It’s alive.”

Josh Russell, a 16-year-old member of Our Lady of Perpetual Help Parish in New Albany and a junior at Our Lady of Providence High School in Clarksville, was a member of the schola.

Chanting in front of 20,000 Catholic youths from across the country was impressive for the former One Bread One Cup participant.

“It was fantastic,” Josh said after a general session on Nov. 22. “I’ve never gotten that kind of opportunity before. It really opened my eyes to how big the Church really is. It’s really worth it to stay in the Church and to work to keep these people close to the Church.

For him, chant doesn’t seem like an old form of music but instead shows “how long-running the sacraments have been and how well Christ has lived through the Church. I think it’s evidence enough that Christ has been in the Church because things like chant can survive for so many years.”

Saint Meinrad's youth liturgy program shares ancient traditions at NCYC

By Sean Gallagher

Two years ago at the National Catholic Youth Conference (NCYC), monks of Saint Meinrad Archabbey helped lead the youth that filled Lucas Oil Stadium in Indianapolis in praying Night Prayer from the Liturgy of the Hours in the ancient practice of Gregorian chant.

This year, youths themselves chanted at various points in the conference’s general sessions in a small schola led by Benedictine Brother John Mark Falkenhain of Saint Meinrad.

Many were former participants of One Bread One Cup, Saint Meinrad’s summer youth liturgical leadership program.

Chant was used at different times during the conference to help its participants enter into an ancient form of prayer called lectio divina (“holy reading”) that involves slowly reading a scriptural text and approaching it in prayer from different perspectives.

Lilly Secret, a member of SS. Francis and Clare of Assisi Parish, “It really opened my eyes to how big the Church really is. It’s really worth it to stay in the Church and to work to keep these people close to the Church.

For him, chant doesn’t seem like an old form of music but instead shows “how long-running the sacraments have been and how well Christ has lived through the Church. I think it’s evidence enough that Christ has been in the Church because things like chant can survive for so many years.”

Special needs services send message, ‘all are welcome’

By Natalie Hoefer

Under the streets of Indianapolis, a youth on crutches rides a golf cart through a tunnel from the Indiana Convention Center to Lucas Oil Stadium for the closing Mass of the National Catholic Youth Conference (NCYC). At that same Mass, a deaf youth laughs at a humorous comment made during the homily, thanks to a volunteer interpreting the words using American Sign Language (ASL). Later, several teens and adults with allergy issues receive communion in special low-gluten hosts. These scenes portray just a few of the ways in which the riches of NCYC are made available to all, including those with special needs.

“If you say all are welcome, people with special needs assume, ‘Oh, that means me, too.’ But that’s not always the case,” says local NCYC special needs coordinator Erin Jeffries, who serves as the archdiocesan coordinator of ministry to those with special needs. That’s why, when signing up for NCYC, attendees can identify special needs they’ll require assistance with during the three-day event.

“It could be issues with hearing, vision, mobility, sensory issues, a need for low-gluten hosts—the needs vary from conference to conference,” says Jeffries. For instance, 150 participants expressed a need for ASL interpreters at the 2015 conference. This year there were none. But just in case, two ASL interpreters were present to sign in front of a section of Lucas Oil Stadium reserved for the hearing impaired during the conference’s four general sessions and closing Mass celebrated there.

Despite no registrants indicating a need, a young woman sat in the section at the opening session on Nov. 21. “She was hard of hearing, but for some reason didn’t see the section for special needs when she registered,” Jeffries explained. One of the ASL interpreters volunteered to sign for the teen at the breakout sessions she wanted to attend the next day.

“We didn’t have any requests, but it’s a good thing we were here—that’s why we’re here,” Jeffries said.

She noted that for this conference, “A big part of what I’m doing is accessibility issues. I connect people with local resources to rent wheelchairs and such, and there are some on site, too. We do what we can to help them get around.”

Jeffries arranged another just-in-case service, a quiet room for those with sensory issues. “We put out paper, decks of playing cards, bean bags, a binder with steps on how to calm down—anything that might help someone who need time away from the noise,” she explained.

And for the first time this year, NCYC included ADA (American Disabilities Act) Needs informational kiosks. The Criterion stopped by one of the ADA booths on the second day of NCYC for a status checkup.

“We’ve rented out all our wheelchairs and scooters,” said Jeffries. “And last night the elevator [was damaged], so we were busy redirecting people this morning.”

While she serves as a local liaison, the National Federation for Catholic Youth Ministry which organizes the event offers special needs services as well, such as assisted listening devices, large-print and Braille program guides and gluten-free hosts.

The special needs services at NCYC are all about welcome, says Jeffries.

“Sometimes you need that explicit invitation, to say, ‘All are welcome, and here, we have these things available to meet your needs.’”

Archdiocesan youths put their best foot forward at NCYC with saintly socks

By John Shaughnessy

Teens from Wisconsin proudly proclaimed their “cheesehead” status with a triangle of cheddar on their heads. Youths from Maryland donned crab hats while their counterparts from Los Angeles roamed the conference halls wearing halos. And teens from Florida were decked out in hats displaying sharks and dolphins.

It was all part of the distinctive, fun and crazy headgear that’s always on display during the National Catholic Youth Conference in Indianapolis—a three-day celebration of faith that brought together 20,000 youths from across the country on Nov. 21–23.

This year, the Archdiocese of Indianapolis wanted to take local pride to another level—creating a head-to-toe look for the 1,456 youths from central and southern Indiana who participated in the conference.

The most unusual part of the ensemble was a pair of socks that pay tribute to St. Theodora Guérin, the first saint in the history of Indiana. The front part of the sock shows an image of the foundress of the Sisters of Providence of Saint Mary-of-the-Woods while the back features the coat of arms of the archdiocese, and the sole shares her motto, “Trust in Providence.”

“It’s a good opportunity to do some catechesis on who St. Theodora is—and help them identify with our archdiocese as the local Church,” said Mary Kate Shanahan, assistant director of youth ministry for the archdiocese.

“We want to let people know she’s part of our archdiocese, part of our story. St. Theodora’s story also fits well with the theme of NCYC— Blessed, Broken, Given. ‘She’s blessed’—she’s a saint. She certainly struggled a lot. And she has given a whole lot to our state and our community through the Sisters of Providence and their outreach.”

The archdiocese’s swag package also included a “trucker” hat in colors of blue and white, with the image of a cow’s head in the middle of “NCYC” and “2019” on the front of the cap. Then there was a grey sweatshirt with the deaneries of the archdiocese outlined on the back. The final part of the package was a collection of stickers with the logo that—like the hat—are designed for trading with youths from other states.

“During the conference, they use the trade items as a way for them to engage and meet other people from all over,” Shanahan said. “It’s fun.”

The swag brought rave reviews from youths in the archdiocese’s contingent.

“I’m so excited about the socks,” said Alyssa Struweing, 16, a member of Holy Spirit Parish in Indianapolis.

“They’re personalized to the Archdiocese of Indianapolis. It’s just so cool that they’re just for us.”

Joan Njoroge liked everything in the package.

“They’re beautiful and appealing,” said Joan, 18, a member of Holy Angels Parish in Indianapolis. “And I like the label of NCYC. It shows you are part of our religion. It also shows togetherness because we all have them.”

Does NCYC have a lasting impact? Yes—I saw it

By Natalie Hoefer

I admit it. I have wondered about the lasting impact the National Catholic Youth Conference (NCYC) has on teens. I do recognize the value of the conference. The experience offers youths and adults alike exposure to thought-provoking workshops and inspiring speakers. It’s eye-opening and encouraging for those at the age when fitting in is of paramount importance to see 20,000 of their peers unashamedly excited about their faith. And absolutely no one can deny the merit of placing these young people in the real presence of our Lord in eucharistic adoration, Mass and confession.

I acknowledge all of this, truly I do. But what I’ve questioned is what happens after NCYC. Do the young people put it into action—let alone simply remember—the lessons they learned there? Do they step out into the world changed, ready to live their faith more intentionally?

I have no doubt many-a-youth minister and parent reading these words are already mentally forming letters to the editor to disprove my doubts.

There is no need. My doubts were dispelled as I walked back to my car after the closing Mass on Nov. 23. It was about 10:30 p.m., cold and dark. Streams of teens sang and chatted their way up West Street in downtown Indianapolis toward comfy rooms in the ritzy hotels that surround the Indiana Convention Center.

I noticed two teens off to the side of the sidewalk. One wore a foam cornet hat, the other a chasuble and bishop’s miter that looked like they were purchased at a Walmart after-Halloween costume sale. The two were bending over near a trash can. I stepped over to make sure they were OK.

That’s when I noticed a man sitting on the cold concrete, huddled against the trash can. The youths were unzipping their backpacks and handing him snacks. More teens noticed, and they too stopped to shower the man with bags of chips, bottles of water and packages of cookies and crackers.

Then another group stopped and gathered around. I’m not sure if it was a teen or a chaperone, but a young-looking man wearing a yellow foam crown stepped up and asked, “Sir, is it all right if we pray with you?”

The man said yes and bowed his head. Some youths did the same, others held out their hands in blessing, and the young man with the crown prayed aloud for the homeless man’s protection, his safety, his ability to find shelter, and his knowledge of God’s love for him.

The foam-crowned man then knelt down and shook the other man’s hand, gave him a pat on the arm and continued up the sidewalk along West Street. The youths offered the seated man a chorus of “good-nights” and “God-bless-you’s” then followed the man wearing the crown.

After the prayers moved on, I noticed that many other groups of goofy-hat-wearing NCYC attendees continued to stream by, singing and chatting, oblivious to the man by the trash can. OK, so maybe not all who participate in NCYC walk away changed. But some do, and I was utterly humbled by the unestimating generosity and charity I witnessed by the youths and young adults who ministered to the man by the trash can.

“All are children of God,” they were told at NCYC. “You’re called to step out of your comfort zone.”

Go and be the hands and feet of Christ.”

“Tell another Christ overcomes sadness.”

Late on a cold night in Indianapolis, these young people put each of these NCYC lessons into action.

Does NCYC make a lasting impact on those who attend? On some it does. And that lived impact makes Christ more present in them, and thus more present to others. Like the homeless man. And me.

Teenagers embrace volunteer opportunities during NCYC

By Mike Krokos

Like many other teenagers, A.J. Terry made sure the time she spent in the thematic park during the National Catholic Youth Conference (NCYC) in Indianapolis was also about helping others.

A.J., a high school freshman who lives in the Diocese of Springfield, Mass., spent several minutes helping put together meals for Pack Away Hunger, an Indianapolis-based organization that provides nutritious dehydrated meals to local food pantries throughout Indiana. They also work with international populations.

The meal consists of rice and soy, dehydrated vegetables and a powerful vitamin nutrient pack that goes into it, said Allison Avin, Pack Away Hunger’s director of communications. The meals are sealed and have a long shelf life.

“It’s so great to see everybody serving. It’s a really hands-on way for them to impact someone’s life,” noted Avin, adding that the teenagers were to pack close to 44,000 meals over the three days of the conference.

A.J. was happy to do her part.

“I really like to help people. I’m really blessed to not have to worry about things like that,” she said. “The ability to help people who do worry about things like that is really nice.”

Avin was impressed by the teens’ commitment to helping others.

“They all are just really eager to serve,” she said, “and it’s so nice to see young people getting engaged with service to others and having a heart for God and being able to really put that into action.”

Olivia Reyna also took time to assist the least fortunate.

“Right now, I’m making a shirt for children in Haiti,” said the 10th grader from the Diocese of Davenport, Iowa, inside the thematic park, which was located in a large exhibition hall in the Indiana Convention Center in Indianapolis.

The outreach, known as Hands Across Haiti, is a ministry of St. John Paul II Parish in Sellersburg. It provides decorated T-shirts, school supplies, tote bags and backpacks to its sister parish in Haiti.

Father Thomas Clegg, pastor of St. John Paul II Parish, said his parish started the outreach six years ago, and they were happy to see NCYC participants step up and help with their initiative.

“It’s so neat to see people grab hold of an idea and say, ‘This is something I can do,’” said Father Clegg. “Not everybody may be able to travel to Haiti, not everybody may be able to travel to Mexico or Latin America, but anybody can come in and decorate a shirt that we’re going to send down there.

The neat part for us is that when we go down to visit [Haiti], we see them wearing these shirts and carrying these backpacks in our schools.”
